CHAPTER XIII.

Internal Improvements—The Union Canal—Reonstrance of Inhabitants against Increasing Power of Corporations—Railroads—Turnpikes.

THE State of Pennsylvania is justly entitled to the credit of having first directed public attention to canals and turnpikes in the United States. David Rittenhouse, the astronomer, and William Smith, D.D., provost of the University of Pennsylvania, were the first movers in the matter. Afterwards Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution, and still later Robert Fulton, the engineer,—of whom Pennsylvania is justly proud,—lent their powerful assistance. In 1792, David Rittenhouse and Dr. William Smith surveyed a route for a canal to connect the waters of the Susquehanna and Schuylkill Rivers by means of the Swatara and Tulpehocken Creeks. The Union Canal, which has since accomplished this object, passes over a portion of this route, the first which was surveyed for a canal in the colonies. The views of the projectors of this work were, if the difficulties of the period be considered, far more gigantic and surprising than have been entertained by their successors in any part of the Union. They contemplated nothing less than a junction of the eastern and western waters of Lake Erie and of the Ohio with the Delaware on a route extending five hundred and eighty-two miles. The Allegheny Mountain was wisely deemed to offer an insuperable obstacle to a continuous navigation. A portage over this section was accordingly recommended,—an expedient which at a later day was compelled to be adopted. To consider the enterprize of that age, we should remember that the great valley of the Ohio and Mississippi was almost one boundless forest, uninhabited save by the morose and treacherous Indian. Attainable money-capital was then almost unknown in the vocabulary of those days. No canal was then in existence in England, Sankey Brook and the Duke of Bridgewater's being yet unfinished. Public opinion even then had yet to learn that canals were not visionary undertakings. The sneers of many were to be encountered. Nevertheless, under all these discouragements, the earliest advocates for inland navigation commenced their labors in Pennsylvania. As early as 1760 they induced the American Philosophical Society to order a survey for a canal to connect the Chesapeake Bay with the Delaware. The Provincial Assembly at the same time authorized a survey on a route extending five hundred and eighty-two miles to Pittsburgh, and this survey was partially by the route of the Tulpehocken and Swatara Creeks. This survey was made and a report followed strongly recommending the execution of the project. The adoption of the plan was postponed in consequence of the Revolution.

After the termination of that struggle several works were commenced in North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland. The canal through the Dismal Swamp, connecting the Chesapeake Bay and Albemarle Sound with the works on the Potomac, James, and Rappahannock Rivers, were commenced and partially finished between 1786 and 1791. The great project of Pennsylvania was allowed to slumber until Sept. 29, 1791, about a century after William Penn's first prophetic intimation, when the Legislature incorporated a company to connect the Susquehanna with the Schuylkill by a canal and slack-water navigation. Robert Morris, David Rittenhouse, Dr. William Smith, Tench Francis, and others, were named as commissioners. The intention of connecting the eastern and northwestern parts of the State is distinctly expressed in this, and in the subsequent act of April 10, 1792. Work was commenced on lands between Lebanon and Myerstown in 1794. By the terms of this last act a company was formed to effect a junction of the Delaware with the Schuylkill River, by a canal extending from Norristown to Philadelphia, a distance of seventeen miles. The Schuylkill River from the former city to Reading was to be temporarily improved, and thus form with the works of the Susquehanna and Schuylkill Company an uninterrupted communication of water with the interior of the State, with the intention of extending the chain to Erie and the Ohio. Experience soon convinced the two companies that a greater length of canal was necessary in consequence of the difficulties of improving the channels of the rivers, hence the company last mentioned determined, in compliance with the suggestion of Mr. Weston, a British engineer, whom they had employed, to extend their canal from river to river, a distance of seventy miles. In conjunction with the former company they nearly completed fifteen miles of the most difficult parts of the two works, comprising much rock excavation, heavy embankment, extensive deep cuttings, and several locks, which were constructed of brick. In consequence of the commercial difficulties, in which it is known that some of the chief stockholders were shortly after involved, both companies were compelled to suspend their operations, after the expenditure of four hundred and forty thousand dollars. The suspension of these works, and subsequently of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, had a most disastrous effect on every similar work which was projected for many years afterwards. Frequent abortive attempts were made from 1794 to resume operations, and notwithstanding the subscription of three hundred thousand dollars stock, subsequently tendered by the State, these companies continued a mere languishing existence.

About this period earnest protests were sent to the Legislature, one of which, numerous signed by inhabitants of Lebanon County, herewith given, goes to show that at that early day the power of great corporations was to be feared, and which we in this year of grace one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three are feeling the serious effects of. Our ancestors were wise thinking no doubt, but only saw the evil and little of the good.

"The Remonstrance of the subscribers, yeomen, and citizens of Penns. respectfully sheweth:

"That it is declared by the Constitution of our country, that 'the Citizens have right, in a peaceable manner, to assemble together for their common good, and to apply to those invested with the power of government, for redress of grievances, or other purposes, by petition, address or remonstrance.' Supported by this authority, and as free citizens of an independent commonwealth, we consider that the right of giving our opinion on public measures, is sufficient to impose on us the duty of calling your attention to several laws, by which a few wealthy and powerful citizens have been embodied, and are authorized to dig Canals and make Turnpike Roads, for their private emolument, to the destruction of public and private property. Should those laws not be repealed, but become precedents to similar laws, the liberties of the people will be destroyed by incorporated companies enjoying partial and dangerous privileges.

"We consider that under every legal government, whether the sovereign power is exercised by a king, by an aristocracy, or by a popular assembly, the People are entitled, to be protected in their lives and properties. The social compact ensures those rights, and at the same time establishes a perfect equality among citizens, that as all lay themselves under the same obligations, and make the same sacrifices to society all ought to enjoy the same privileges. Laws made contrary to these fundamental principles, are made in violation of that duty which the Legislature owes to the People, and therefore must be regarded as arbitrary and unjust. A nation is obliged to preserve every one of its members. The nation owes this to itself, since the loss even of one of its members weakens it, and is injurious to its own preservation. Those who compose a nation are united for their defence and common advantage, and none can be justly deprived of the protection of the union, or of the advantages which flow from it, whilst he acts the part of a good citizen. If the government has a right to take one acre of the property of the farmer, without his consent, and bestow it for the advantage of a privileged company of citizens, it has the same right to deprive him of his whole farm. In whatever country or under whatever form of government such an abuse of power is exercised, there can only exist masters and slaves.—The theory of such a government is falsehood and mockery—the practice is oppression. Nothing appears more absurd, than to esteem any act right and just, merely because it has the sanction of the Legislature: If our rights have no other foundation, they are as insecure as under the most despotic monarchy. What encouragement to agricultural improvements, if the property of the farmer is at any time at the absolute disposal of others?—If that power which, when restrained within its just bounds, would dispense light and heat to the whole country, may be employed like a devouring flame to destroy?—It is a matter of the first importance to a free commonwealth, to have the powers of the legislature defined with precision. We do not think it necessary to enquire into the extent of this power. The history of governments will furnish nothing satisfactory on this subject. In the disputes between sovereigns and the people, recourse is commonly had to history, to seek in the decisions and in the ancient customs of nations, examples or facts to regulate the judgment, but these histories, often dictated by fear or flattery, exhibit little more than the most horrid abuses and oppressions on the part of the sovereigns, and the too ineffectual struggles of the people to preserve their liberties.

"There does not exist a country in which the just limits of the sovereign and the rights of the people have been preserved. But it is not to the customs, to the examples, nor even to the concessions of other nations, to which we appeal on the present question; it is to the inalienable rights of the people, it is to reason, it is to justice, it is to the enlightened understanding of the representatives of a free people.

"We observe, with great anxiety, wealthy incorporated companies taking possession of public and private property. The outrages committed by those privileged orders have already occasioned several hundred of our fellow-citizens to appeal to the legislature for redress. The inequality introduced by such establishments must destroy the liberties of our country. No observation is better supported than this that a country cannot long preserve its liberty where a great inequality of property takes place. Is it not, therefore, the most dangerous policy in this infant republic to combine the wealthy in order to make them powerful? Whatst we contend for an equality of rights we have no idea of the justice of an equal division of property. We know that a difference will always take place in society according to the physical and acquired abilities of its members, and this inequality, so far from being a source of evil, is the true basis of public prosperity. It invites the members of the same society mutually to assist each other, according to their various abilities. This mutual exchange of good offices is destroyed and the commonwealth endangered whenever, by arbitrary and partial laws, a few are incorporated and made sufficiently powerful by privileges and wealth to purchase or to destroy the property and rights of their fellow-citizens.

"Influenced by these principles, and engaged in an occupation not only necessary to the existence of our country, but which we know to be productive in proportion to the liberty, independence, and security of the farmer, we trust that the legislature will neither think our request unreasonable or unjust, when we pray to have those obnoxious laws repealed, by the authority of which companies have been incorporated to dig canals and make turnpike roads, to the injury of public and private property.

"An act of this kind, however it might be censured by a few interested individuals, would not only be consistent with the strictest principles of justice, but supported by precedent. Vattel observes that the prince or superior of the society, whatever he is, being naturally no more than the administrator, and not the proprietor of the State, his authority as sovereign or head of the nation, does not of itself give him a right to alienate or dispose of the public property. The general rule, then, is that the superior cannot dispose of the public property as to its substance. If the superior makes use of this property, the alienation he makes of it will be invalid, and may at any time be revoked by his successor, or by the nation. This is the law commonly received in France, and it was upon this principle that the duke of Sulley alienated Henry IV. to resume the possession of all the domains of the crown, alienated by his predecessors. The records of the legislature of our own country afford an honorable instance of substantial justice in the restoration of private property taken from its owners by law. On the memorial of Dr. William Smith and others, trustees of the college, academy, and charitable school of Philadelphia, a law was enacted by which the former law was repealed, and the property restored to the owners."

Notwithstanding such vigorous protests, the march of internal improvements kept on. In 1811 the two canal companies were united and reorganized as the Union Canal Company, with special authority to extend their canal from Philadelphia to Lake Erie, with the privilege of making such further extension in any other part of the State as they might deem expedient. In 1819 and 1821 the State granted further aid by a guarantee of interest and a monopoly of the lottery privilege. The additional subscriptions obtained in consequence of this legislative encouragement, enabled the managers to resume operations in 1821. The line was relocated, the dimensions of the canal changed, and the whole work finished in about six years from this period, after thirty-seven years had elapsed from the commencement of the work, and sixty-five from the date of the first survey.

It was completed in 1827, and the first boat, the "Alpha, of Tulpehocken," passed Lebanon on its way westward. Up to 1828, one million six hundred thousand dollars had been expended in the construction of the work, in addition to the proceeds of the lotteries, and excluding the sums expended on the old work.

The main line of the canal is seventy-nine miles in length from Middletown on the Susquehanna, where it connects with the Pennsylvania Canal, to a point a short distance below Reading, where it joins the works of the Schuylkill Navigation Company. There is also a navigable feeder seven miles in length called the Swatara Feeder. The summit is six miles and seventy-eight chains (between the Swatara and Tulpehocken) in length, extending two miles east of Lebanon, and about four west. It passes over a limestone district, and much deep excavation in the rock was required. In consequence of the many fissures which abound in limestone rocks, the usual experiment of puddling did not succeed in retaining water in the summit, and after many experiments it was found necessary to plank this section throughout.

The descent to the Schuylkill, accomplished with fifty-four locks, is three hundred and seven feet; to the Susquehanna, with thirty-four locks, one hundred and ninety-three feet. At the western end of the summit is a tunnel, seven hundred and twenty-nine feet in length, excavated in solid rock, and this was the first tunnel constructed in the United States. The summit was filled with water pumped from the Quitapohilla and Swatara Creeks, to an elevation sufficient to carry it through feeders, that from the Quitapohilla being half a mile in length and near Lebanon; and the one from the Swatara about three miles in length, the Union Water-works being about five miles from Lebanon. The canal, as first constructed for boats of twenty-five tons, excluded most of the boats plying on the State Works, but from 1853 to 1857, it was enlarged. The planking was also removed from the summit, and the old plan of puddling resorted to. There was still a scarcity of water, until 1866, when three large reservoirs were constructed north of the canal, two near Lebanon, and one near Myerstown. They were projected by L. R. Hynicka, the then efficient superintendent of the canal, and answered the purpose so well, that it is contemplated to erect additional ones, and thus the necessity of using any pumping machinery whatever was avoided.

This canal, as previously noted, was the first constructed in America, and as the pioneer work of the country, it certainly was an enterprise of stupendous magnitude. Identical with the completion and operation of this maritime highway is much of the material prosperity, not only of Lebanon, but of the whole country, due; and from that time dates the steady growth in population and agricultural wealth which has made Lebanon County what it is. In this era of railroads it may have lost its commercial preponderance, but nothing can alter the fact that its projectors have done more for Lebanon County in the past than any other person or persons, nor take from them the honor of having laid the "corner-stone" of the prosperity of the sections through which the canal passes.

The Philadelphia and Reading and the Lebanon Valley Railroads.—The Philadelphia and Reading may well be called the pioneer railroad of Pennsylvania. The company was chartered by the Legislature, April 4, 1833, to build a road from Philadelphia to Reading, a distance of fifty-eight miles. In 1835 work was commenced, and portions of the road were open for travel in 1838. During this year authority was obtained to extend the road from Mount Carbon to Pottsville. These points were already connected by the Mount Carbon Railroad, and it was decided to extend the road to connect therewith. The Mount Carbon Railroad was leased in 1872, when it became a part of the main line.

The first through trains between Philadelphia and Pottsville—ninety-three miles—were run early in 1842, although local trains were run in 1838. The branch from the Falls of the Schuylkill to Port Richmond, from which shipments of coal are made, was completed in 1842. Since then over sixty million tons of coal have been shipped from that point, principally for consumption in the Eastern and Middle States. In 1850 the company bought extensive properties of the State, situated in Philadelphia. The Lebanon Valley Railroad, fifty-four miles long, extending from Reading to Harrisburg, came under their control in 1858. This road passes through the entire county of Lebanon, east and west, and, since it came under the management of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, has been extensively improved. Not only has it become a great thoroughfare for a constantly increasing travel, but it has done much to improve and benefit the country through which it passes. With the increased facilities for rapid transportation which it has given Lebanon it has become an important manufacturing town, with an increased and largely-increasing population. Villages have sprung up around its stations. Richland, Avon, and Prescott perhaps owe their existence as villages, and certainly their thrift and prosperity, to the Lebanon Valley Railroad, a branch of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. Palmyra, Annville, Myerstown, and Sheridan have become business places of great importance, and their increased trade passing over the lines of this company is yearly increasing its already immense traffic. The Lebanon and Tremont Railroad, forty-two miles in length, extending from Lebanon to Tremont, is also under their management, and over its lines large quantities of coal pass, which are annually needed in the manufacture of iron, lime, and brick, as well as for domestic uses and various other manufacturing purposes. The country along its line is also rapidly improving. Although not so long a time having elapsed since it was open to travel, the improvements are not so marked as along the Lebanon Valley line, which has been opened a much longer time. Both the Lebanon Valley and Lebanon and Tremont Railroads connect at Lebanon with the Cornwall Railroad, extending to Cornwall, where immense furnaces exist, which annually consume large quantities of anthracite coal, brought over the line of the Lebanon and Tremont Railroad. At Jonestown this road intersects the South Mountain Railroad. The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad has a perpetual lease on the canal of the Schuylkill Navigation Company, one hundred and eight miles in length, and also on the Susquehanna and Tidewater Canal, on the Susquehanna River. Their chief business is the transportation of coal from the first and second anthracite coal-fields of Pennsylvania to tide-water, in the Delaware River, at Port Richmond, Philadelphia. At this point, its eastern terminus, extensive wharves extending from three hundred to eight hundred feet into the Delaware River have been erected, allowing a direct discharge of coal into the vessels. The Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company own and control about one hundred thousand acres of anthracite coal lands. The company conduct a large express business on the railroad, and have some one hundred and fifty offices, from which a fine profit is annually realized. Their immense business requires five hundred locomotive engines. The railroads owned and leased by the Philadelphia and Reading company aggregate, with sidings, over fifteen hundred miles.

South Mountain Railroad.—Among the great enterprises of the past decade, the South Mountain Railroad is deservedly entitled to a high rank. It was near the flourishing borough of Jonestown that the first shovelful of earth was thrown, and from that small beginning has grown steadily each new feature of this great undertaking, until from possibility has grown probability, certainty, until all through the fertile valleys of Dauphin and Lebanon, the rich agricultural lands of Berks and Lehigh, the exhausted slate regions of Eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and still through the great deposits of iron and zinc in Northern New Jersey and Southern New York, with the rich dairy country stretching from the Delaware to the Hudson, the links of that great chain which, when finished, will join the commercial cities of the Eastern and Middle States in still stronger bonds. The first president of this road was William H. Bell, and among its directors were some of the leading men of the county. It commences at Harrisburg and pursues a northeasterly course. Part of the way as the South Mountain, and part of the way under other names, but all of the way under the Jonestown management to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where it connects with the direct eastern roads to Boston. The principal office is at Jonestown.

The Schuylkill and Susquehanna Railroad passes through Cold Spring township in the northwestern part of the county, between the Second and Third Mountains. It was the first railroad constructed within the limits of the county, but as its name indicates, it establishes communication between Dauphin and Schuylkill, and has no real business relation to this county.

The North Lebanon Railroad, about seven miles in length, from the North Lebanon Furnaces near Lebanon borough to the ore banks at Cornwall, was constructed in 1854. It establishes a close communication with the iron mines at Cornwall, and immense quantities of ore are brought over the road.

The Lebanon and Tremont Railroad first started as the Pinegrove and Lancaster Railroad, runs from Lebanon to Tremont, inclining to the northeast until entering Schuylkill County.

The Railroads at Cornwall we have referred to in the sketch relating to those great iron establishments.

TURNPIKE ROADS.—Some brief mention should be made of the old turnpike roads in the county.

The Berks and Dauphin County Turnpike, usually known as the Harrisburg and Reading Turnpike, was commenced in 1816 and finished in 1817, at an average cost of three thousand eight hundred dollars per mile. It passes through the centre of the Lebanon Valley. The State aided this work by subscribing to its stock twenty-nine thousand nine hundred dollars.

The Downingtown, Ephrata and Harrisburg Turnpike, generally called the "Horseshoe Pike," from its winding course through the counties of Lancaster, Lebanon, and Dauphin, was commenced in 1803 and completed in 1819. It runs through the southern part of Lebanon County, crossing the mountain from Lancaster, and the greater part of its course is near the foot of the South Mountain.

The Cornwall Plank Road, from Lebanon to Cornwall, was built in 1852. The planks have gradually been replaced by "piking," until it has become the "Cornwall Turnpike."

CHAPTER XIV.

The War for the Union—The Services of Lebanon County in that Civil Conflict.

FIFTY years of peace was guaranteed the people of Lebanon, when the thunders of a great civil war awoke her people to loyalty and duty.

We shall not enter fully into the causes which led to the great civil conflict of 1861-65, nor attempt to give a perfectly full record of the part which Lebanon County took in the struggle for the perpetuity of the Union. That there were causes of complaint on both sides—North as well as South—all will agree, and that it could have been settled inside instead of outside the Union, even those who once favored a Southern Confederacy now see also. But the sword is the great arbiter of events, and although good men on both sides counseled moderation, deplored the expedient of war, the South, quick to passions and full of prejudices, took the initiatory step which led to a fearful struggle of fratricidal warfare.

As early as Nov. 9, 1860, citizens of South Carolina attempted to seize Fort Moultrie. On the 11th of November, Senator Hammond, of South Carolina, contemptuously resigned his seat to become a member of the Southern Confederacy; and on the 18th of the same month (November) the Legislature of Georgia appropriated one million dollars to arm the State against the United States; on the 10th of December, 1860, Howell Cobb, Secretary of the Treasury, and Senator Clay, of Alabama, both resigned; and on the 20th the South Carolina convention adopted a secession ordinance unanimously, and on December 24th all their members of Congress resigned, while on the 27th of December, 1860, the State troops of South Carolina seized the government property in Charleston, and occupied Castle Pinckney and Fort Moultrie, and on the 30th took possession of the United States arsenal. All this occurred in the year A.D. 1860, and yet the national government and the North looked calmly on. On the 2d of January, 1861, Governor Ellis, of North Carolina, took possession of Fort Macon, and on the 3d the Georgia troops seized the United States arsenal at Mount Vernon, on the 5th occupied Forts Morgan and Gaines, while on the 6th the Florida State troops captured Fort Marion, and on the 9th, in trying to supply Fort Sumter, the steamer "Star of the West" was fired upon by Confederate batteries and forced to retreat. And what did the North do then? Simply nothing. Encouraged by the supineness of the North, the State troops of North Carolina, on the 9th of January, 1861, seized Fort Johnson, and on the following day Fort Caswell; on the 11th the Louisiana troops seized Forts Philip, Jackson, Pike, and Macomb, and the United States arsenal at Baton Rouge; on the 12th the Florida State troops took possession of the Pensacola navy yard and Forts Barrancas and McRea; on the 18th of January, Virginia appropriated one million dollars for defense; on the 20th, Mississippi seized the forts on Ship Island; on the 24th, Georgia took possession of the arsenal at Augusta, and on the 26th, of Oglethorpe Barracks and Fort Jackson; on Feb. 1, 1861, Louisiana seized the United States mint and custom-house at New Orleans; on the 8th the arsenal at Little Rock, Ark., was seized, and Gen. Twiggs, on the 18th, surrendered to them one million two hundred thousand dollars worth of property in Texas; on the 19th, Fort Kearney in Kansas was seized.

On the 1st of March the Confederate government had got well under way at Charleston, and not one act to stop them. President Lincoln came into power on the 4th of March, 1861, and there was a lull for a time. Believing that the Northern people were by this time completely overawed, on the 12th of April Gen. Beauregard opened fire upon Fort Sumter, which roused the indignation of the loyal North and stirred to the very depths the patriotism of all true lovers of our country, and that North as one man rose to avenge the insult to the flag and the integrity to the nation.

In Lebanon County, as in every section of the free North, the enthusiasm of the loyal people was unbounded, and the brief summary of events which is herewith given is from the eloquent pen of a representative man of the Lebanon Valley, William M. Breslin, editor of the Advertiser, and to him we give full credit for the facts which follow, presenting at the close a record of each organization so far as the information has come to our knowledge.

"Lebanon County was not backward in responding to the universal feeling, and quickly girded on her armor. The first war meeting was held in the courthouse, on the 18th of April, 1861, six days after the firing on Fort Sumter. The meeting was called to order by David M. Karmany, was presided over by Charles B. Forney, and patriotic resolutions were reported by a committee, of which Dr. Cyrus D. Gloninger was chairman. During the absence of the committee the meeting was addressed by the enthusiastic and eloquent Rev. J. M. McCarter, who added additional flame, if that was possible, to the already aroused patriotism of the people. The spirit was there; but other things were also necessary for the emergency. Money and soldiers were needed, and both were forthcoming without stint. The military fund, subscribed on the spot, amounted to three thousand three hundred and sixty-five dollars, and sixty-one men volunteered to shoulder the musket and march forth to help crush treason. These sixty-one men formed the nucleus of Capt. John Ulrich's company of three months' men. This company, named the Lebanon Guards, was quickly filled to its maximum number, and organized by the election of additional officers, and on Saturday, April 20th, proceeded to Harrisburg and encamped in Camp Curtin. Then the first drawback to our embryo soldiers took place. There was an excess of twenty-seven men in the company, who were compelled to accept discharges. Their patriotic ardor and military spirit soon found other organizations to enlist in.

"Immediately after the departure of Capt. Ulrich's company, the Lebanon Cadets were raised by William M. Derr, and were immediately accepted by the Governor; but, owing to the large number of volunteers of proper age offering, their acceptance was withdrawn, much to the regret of all interested. Capt. Samuel R. Fauber, of Jonestown, recruited a company in that section of the county; and about the same time Capt. Elijah G. Lantz started the recruiting of the first company of three years' men. It was not only earnestness, but the utmost enthusiasm prevailed among all classes of people. The drum and fife were heard all day, and frequently half the night, gathering in recruits, and still further arousing the patriotism of the people, if that was possible. Flags were flung to the breeze, not only from the public buildings, but most private families displayed the stars and stripes in some manner, from the one-hundred-dollar silk down to the cheapest and commonest, but all in evidence of the patriotic feelings of the people.

"County and borough meetings were held at an early day to provide for the support of the families of the soldiers during their absence. Among the first of these meetings was one to request the county commissioners to appropriate ten thousand dollars for that purpose. A committee was appointed, which waited upon the commissioners, and the appropriation was at once made.

"Capt. Faber's company, which had not yet been accepted, proceeded to Harrisburg on the 8th of May, and offered their services, but were rejected. They returned home very much displeased with their bad success. Some of the members remained in Camp Curtin and enlisted in other companies. The reason for the rejection of Capt. Faber's company was not because of anything objectionable in its make-up, it being composed of good material, but because of the great superfluity of companies offering. There were already—on the 8th of May—on file in the military department at Harrisburg, offers of two hundred and eighty-three companies over and above the twenty-five regiments asked for by the Governor. Being thus supplied, no more could be accepted at that time. There was no lack of soldiers, but the great trouble was how to dispose of the superabundance of men who were not only ready and anxious to volunteer, but persistent in their demand to be enrolled.

"The recruiting of Capt. Lantz's and Capt. Myers companies of three-years' men was completed by this time. The former was recruited principally from Cornwall, Londonderry, the Annvilles, and the borough of Lebanon; and the latter from Jackson and neighboring townships. Capt. Jerome Myers' company, known as the 'Myerstown Rifles,' left Myerstown for Camp Curtin on May 10, 1861, and was accepted on the 17th of May. Capt. Lantz's company was accepted the same day, and left for camp on the 26th of May. It was already seen by this time that the war was not likely to be brought to a close in ninety days, as was frequently announced, in high-toned bulletins, from headquarters at Washington. The 'On to Richmond' was not likely to be accomplished by the three-months' men; hence, to be on the safe side, the enlistments most desirable were for three years, unless sooner discharged. Capts. Lantz's and Myers' companies were attached to the Pennsylvania Reserves, and did good service during the war, suffering terribly at times; but they never received the meed of praise to which they were entitled for their brave and arduous services. In addition to the many favors extended to them privately, the county commissioners made an appropriation of one dollar and twenty-five cents a week to the wife of a soldier, and fifty cents a week for each child. There was, besides, a relief fund, which was appropriated on extraordinary occasions.

"Company G returned to Lebanon on the 25th of July, 1861, their term of service having expired, and they were honorably discharged. They were not engaged in any battle; the battle of Bull Run, the first regular battle of the war, having taken place after the expiration of their term of service.

"Upon the return of the Lebanon Guards, Gen. John Weidman, as honorable and patriotic a gentleman as Lebanon ever produced, started the recruiting of his cavalry company; by the 29th of August had it ready for service; proceeded to Camp Curtin, and from there to Washington.

"About the 24th of August the first steps were taken to organize what was looked upon by many as an impossibility,—a Lebanon County regiment,—and which eventuated in the bullet-riddled Ninety-third. The first public meeting in regard to the matter was presided over by Dr. John W. Gloninger. The enthusiasm ran high, which was stirred to the boiling point by the crusadal appeals of the eloquent Rev. McCarter, who received authority in the beginning of September, 1861, to recruit a regiment in Lebanon County. Following Lebanon, meetings were also held in the various towns of the county, at which recruiting progressed rapidly. A camp was established on what was then known as the Fair Grounds, on the east side of Eighth Street, a short distance north of the railroad, the spot now partly taken up by the monument grounds. The recruited men were taken there, and immediately sworn in. Recruits poured in rapidly, and soon the Lebanon County regiment was an established fact. Organizations into companies were effected without delay, and a regimental staff elected. The original organization of the companies of the Ninety-third Regiment was as follows:

"Perseverance No. 1, Company A, Capt. William M. Derr.

"Union Zouaves, Company B, Capt. John E. Arthur.

"Quitopahilla Guards, Company C, Capt. William W. Murray.

"Washington Guards, Company E, Capt. G. B. Shearer.

"Perseverance Guards, Company F, Capt. John S. Long.

"Coleman Rifles, Company G, Capt. Alexander C. Maitland.

"McCarter Guards, Company I, Capt. D. J. Boynton.

"Annville Guards, Company K, Capt. Eli Daugherty.

"Of these companies, A, C, D, F, and K, were exclusively Lebanon County companies; although the others also contained large numbers of Lebanon County men. The titles of the companies were dropped upon mustering into the service; and thereafter, in the history of the war, they were known by the number of the regiment and the letter of the company. The regiment being organized, the Perseverance Band, under the leadership of John Stanley, volunteered, was accepted, and attached to the Ninety-third Regiment. Thus the regiment was complete, and was known throughout the war as the Lebanon County regiment. Although the Ninety-third contained quite a number of men from other counties, the fact is beyond dispute, that a full regiment was recruited from Lebanon County, and was actually in the service at this time. A history of the regiment is given with the rolls of the companies. At this period Capts. Lantz, Meyers, and Weidman each had a company of Lebanon County men in the field; Capt. Diehl's company of Reading Light Infantry had twenty-four Lebanon County men; Capt. Shaefler's Company I, in the One Hundred and Seventh Regiment, was mostly composed of men recruited in Lebanon County; thirty-nine Lebanon County men were also enlisted in Battery H, Third Regiment Heavy Artillery; all these, with the many individual enlistments in other regiments, swelled the number of Lebanon County three-years' men in the service far beyond the requirements of a regiment. But Lebanon County did not stop here, small as its territory and population were. On every emergency call, no matter for what length of time, the people always responded, as Capt. Greenawalt's, Capt. Bossler's, Capt. Jeremiah Hoffman's, and other companies are full evidence. Squads of men were also raised and taken out of the county, of whom scarcely any note was made. As an instance of the heavy drain volunteering made upon the population, it may be mentioned that at one time the then West Ward of the borough of Lebanon had furnished over one-half of its able-bodied men as volunteers. Every other man was a soldier in the service of his country. But even this was not all. The drafts came, and hundreds more were called for, and, willing or unwilling, had to respond.

"Aside from the many individual operations, the organization in Lebanon, known as the Ladies' Aid Society, shipped in three months, from September, 1861, to January, 1862, to the hospitals and regiments bags, boxes, barrels, etc., of provisions and clothing to the number of one thousand one hundred and seventy, weighing over twenty-one tons, all this exclusive of what was sent by express. In 1862, the county commissioners paid $37,657.51 for bounty and relief. This enormous sum was paid from the county treasury, and was independent of the large sums contributed by Lebanon borough, and the townships, and by individuals. In 1863, the amount contributed was about the same, but in 1864 money was expended with a lavishness that seems appalling at this day. The Relief Fund of the county was about $15,000, but the Bounty Fund amounted to the enormous sum of $207,355. The borough contributed the same year for bounty $35,307. The townships also expended large amounts for the same purpose. There is no full data of their expenditures, but from what we can glean, we are safe in saying that the people of Lebanon County as individuals and in their respective corporate capacities expended for bounty and relief during the year 1864 not less than $500,000.

"The peninsula campaign of 1862 coming to an end, the Rebellion had shown itself more formidable than had been anticipated; a great army had been repulsed, disorganized, if not in a great measure destroyed. More men were wanted. The President made a requisition for twenty-one new regiments of volunteers from Pennsylvania, to be forthcoming by the 15th of August, or, on failure of volunteers, to be supplied by draft.

"The enemy became threatening, and without waiting for the volunteers, a draft of three hundred thousand men for nine months' service was ordered on the 3d of August. The drum and fife were now again heard all day and far into the night, arousing the military spirit of the people.

"Recruiting for Capt. Greenawalt's Guards commenced on Friday morning, August 6th, and by Saturday evening there were one hundred and thirty-nine names on the rolls. The same evening they left for Camp Curtin, were accepted, and the next day were sent to Washington. This company was emphatically a Lebanon company. They were attached to the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment, Col. W. W. Jennings, for a roll and history of which see History of Dauphin County. A company called the Lebanon Valley Rifles, Capt. William Fox, was raised partly in Lebanon and partly in Schuylkill Counties. Another company was raised in Jackson township by Capt. John H. Bossler, and was attached to the Bucktail brigade. At the same time Capt. Jeremiah Hoffman enlisted a company in Heidelberg township for three years' service. Londonderry and Bethel furnished squads in accordance with population, who joined similar squads of other places at Camp Curtin, where they were formed into companies. The Fredericksburg squad was under command of Lieut. William J. Carver, and filled up a Crawford County company; the Palmyra men were under command of Lieut. Jerome W. Henry, and joined a company under command of Capt. Ira B. Shepley, and were also attached to the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment.

"The times were ominous of disaster. Pope had made his headquarters in the saddle, and with his army was on the retreat towards Washington from the second battle of Bull Run, leaving thousands of dead and dying on the field. The wounded must be cared for; nurses, hospital stores, and everything else for such an emergency was wanting. A meeting was promptly held in the court-house, when all our physicians and twenty-five male nurses left for Washington with the first train. But, notwithstanding the dead and the dying, the rebel armies were crossing the Potomac and threatening Pennsylvania. Our volunteers for three years, and for nine months, were being pushed forward to the aid of the defeated soldiers in the field as rapidly as possible; but still more men were wanted if the nation's life was to be saved.

"The President's requisition for three hundred thousand men was filled by draft and otherwise,—Lebanon County meeting its obligations by the otherwise, and thus avoided the draft for the time being, we having more men in the field than our requirement, which was considered very favorable and patriotic at the time.

"State guards were also organized by request of the Governor. Lebanon furnished two such companies,—one under command of Capt. John Ulrich, and the other under command of Lieut. David C. Dissinger. About the same time Capt. William Tice, of Myerstown, organized a cavalry company, which was rapidly filled, and left for Harrisburg on the 17th of September. Jonestown and neighborhood also furnished a full company, under command of Capt. George Meily. A detachment was also enlisted in Lebanon by Lieut. W. D. Ranck, for the One Hundred and Fifty-second Regiment, or Third Regiment Heavy Artillery. They numbered thirty-nine men, under Lieut. John Light. Capt. Ulrich's company of State guards left for Harrisburg September 15th, and a cavalry company, organized by Capt. D. M. Karmany, left September 17th. The former reached Hagerstown and the latter Chambersburg, when the enemy wisely retreated, and both companies returned to Lebanon, full of glory, within ten days of their departure.

"The first draft in the county was made in the court-house, on the 22d of October, 1862, for four hundred men. The boroughs of Lebanon and North Lebanon, and the townships of Jackson, Cornwall, and Cold Spring were exempt,—they having furnished their quotas. The drafted men left for Harrisburg on the 30th of October, and were from thence sent on through Baltimore and Washington to Norfolk, Va. These four hundred men were drafted from the body of the county, after the bone and sinew, to the number of over one thousand, had already gone to the front. These drafted men were looked upon as the light marines in the navy were looked upon,—to do a great deal of hard work and receive no credit, not even respect therefor. There were many cases of exceptional hardship among the drafted men, not because they were any the less brave, but that their circumstances and situations were such that they could not leave home or family without being subjected to great, if not ruinous, sacrifices. Hence the bounty for substitutes rose rapidly to five hundred, seven hundred, and one thousand dollars, and in some instances to one thousand five hundred dollars. The drafted men were placed in the One Hundred and Seventy-third Regiment, with Daniel Nagle as colonel, and Grant Weidman as major. Joseph R. Henry, then of Annville, Elias R. Light, of Lebanon, and William B. Iba, of Heidelberg, became captains of their respective companies.

"Companies E and F of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh returned to Lebanon on the 30th of May, 1863, their term of nine months' service having expired. Capt. Greenawalt's company lost but three men during its absence,—Gerberich and Zimmerman, who died, and Adam Carmany, supposed to have been killed in the first battle of Fredericksburg. The company received a public reception.

"The defeat of the Union forces at Winchester, in June, 1863, opened the way for the enemy to make a raid into Pennsylvania, which they were not slow in taking advantage of. They crossed the Potomac, and passed up the Cumberland Valley towards Harrisburg, carrying consternation and dismay not only throughout that section, but even to the counties adjoining. A town-meeting was promptly held, as usual; but, instead of resolutions, subscriptions and soldiers were necessary. Both were promptly raised, and, on June 17th, a company, under command of Capt. Greenawalt, left for Harrisburg, and was attached to the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment. This was, perhaps, the most momentous period for Lebanon Valley during the war. The great battle of Gettysburg was impending, in which, fortunately, the backbone of the Rebellion was so effectually fractured that they might as well have ceased resistance then and there, and thereby avoided the destruction of many lives, the shedding of much blood, and the expenditure of vast sums of treasure for both sides.

"The Governor issued a proclamation, calling for fifty thousand volunteer militia for the defense of Pennsylvania. The rebels occupied York and Wrightsville, and were advancing up the Cumberland Valley, almost unopposed, threatening Harrisburg. Gen. Knipe, in command of our forces at Carlisle, had been obliged to retire; the rebel pickets were at Mechanicsburg, only nine miles from Harrisburg. Consternation seized the people of Lebanon to such an extent that a number of our merchants packed up their goods for removal, the banks hurried off their money to New York, stores were closed, signs were burned or hid in the cellars, and business generally was suspended.

"The militia called for by the Governor were rapidly organized. Lebanon was deeply interested, and soon had a company organized, under command of Capt. John B. Embich, which at once left for Reading (on the 29th of June), where the militia were formed into regiments. An East Hanover company, commanded by Capt. Stein, passed through Lebanon on the 30th.

"A meeting was held in the court-house at which one dollar a day extra was offered for volunteers, and companies rapidly sprung up by squads, by tens, and by twenties.

"Subsequently the commissioners also resolved that three dollars a week be paid for volunteers for ninety days. They also passed a resolution requesting a general suspension of business, and the publication of newspapers, so that the discussion of public questions might be avoided.

"The great battle of Gettysburg was fought on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of July, 1863. The rebels were defeated, obliged to leave the soil of Pennsylvania, and retire to the other side of the Potomac. There were not many Lebanon County soldiers engaged in that sanguinary conflict, but the casualties were, to our men, as usual, quite large. Capt. Sperry received his death-wound in that battle. Capt. Bossler, of Myerstown, of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Regiment, took fifty-six men into battle, brought out eleven, and was himself wounded. Company K, of the One Hundred and Forty-second, in which Jeremiah Hoffman was a lieutenant, went into action with thirty-two men, and brought out eight. Lieut. Hoffman was also seriously wounded. Capt. Tice and Lieut. George Focht were also badly wounded.

"Capt. Greenawalt's company also met with severe reverses during the operations around Gettysburg. Some of his men were taken prisoners and marched 'on to Richmond,' but they all eventually returned to their homes.

"Shortly after the battle of Gettysburg the President called for three hundred thousand men. Great efforts were made to avoid them by volunteering, but they followed each other so rapidly that it became impossible to supply the men wanted in that manner. On the 23d of September a draft for eight hundred and forty-two men from this county was made at Pottsville. Substitutes then came into great demand, and commanded a large premium. On the 17th of October, less than a month after, another call was made by the President for 'three hundred thousand more,' which, if not supplied by the 5th of January by volunteers, a draft was again to be made. These three hundred thousand were intended to fill up the regiments in the field. Veterans received a bounty and premium of four hundred and two dollars; others three hundred and two dollars. The draft was postponed to the 15th of January, and then again postponed, but on the 1st of February, 1864, a call was made for five hundred thousand men to serve for three years or during the war. This was also postponed to the 1st of April, by which time the Lebanon County quotas were filled without drafting. On the 14th of March another draft for two hundred thousand men was ordered, to take place on the 15th of April.

"On the 18th of July another draft for five hundred thousand men was ordered to be made in fifty days, if that number of volunteers should not be forthcoming in the mean time. On the 15th of September the one hundred days' men reached Harrisburg, and were paid off. About this time a company was raised in Lebanon by Capt. Jacob Weidle, which was attached to the Two Hundred and Ninth Regiment as Company K. On the 20th of September the members of the Ninety-third who had not re-enlisted returned to their homes and were honorably discharged. On the 19th of December another draft for three hundred thousand more men was ordered to be made on the 15th of February.

"On March 4th and 6th, 1865, the last draft took place. Five hundred and twenty-four men were drafted in this county, fifty-four from the borough. But the war was coming to a close, and the drafted men were never called upon for service.

"On Monday, April 3, 1865, the shout went forth,—"Richmond is taken! The rebels are fleeing!" This was the result of five days' fighting in and around Petersburg. Although the good news electrified every Northern heart with joy and pleasure, it was also accompanied with great sorrow, for our losses in the great battles at the defenses of the beleaguered capital of the Confederacy were very heavy.

"For the last time the Ninety-third passed through its ordeal of death and blood. Among the killed was Capt. George W. Mellinger. Col. Keller, Maj. Fritz, and Capt. Gruber were severely wounded. In the first battle at Petersburg the Ninety-third lost five killed and eighty-five wounded, and in the second three killed and twenty-five wounded. The Two Hundredth Regiment, to which Capt. Hoffman's company belonged, had two killed and fourteen wounded from this county. It was proper that the greatest honor of the war should have fallen to the Ninety-third, in payment for its terrible losses and sufferings. The Ninety-third was the first to break the enemy's centre at Petersburg, which led to the evacuation of Richmond, the surrender of Lee, and the close of the war.

"On the 9th of April, Gen. Lee, the commander-in-chief of the rebel army, surrendered his forces, arms, ammunition, banners, and standards to Lieut.-Gen. Grant, commander of the Union armies, at Appomattox Court-House. The Rebellion was crushed, and the Union preserved in all its integrity. Joy reigned supreme all over the North, and many in the South were glad that the long and bloody struggle was over."

CHAPTER XV.

The War for the Union (Continued)—Officers in other Regiments—Fifth Regiment—Thirty-Sixth Regiment—Sixty-Fourth Regiment—Eighty-Seventh Regiment.

As to the names of many officers and men who served in the Rebellion in various capacities we have no means to obtain. We merely give those accessible. That there were others, both in the land and naval forces of the Union, we fully know, and it is a regret we experience at not being able to preserve the record of such in our history of the county. We would be pleased to have given a full history of each regiment wherein there was a Lebanon County company, but owing to the limits of this volume we have confined our record to those commands where the principal companies were from this locality:

TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

Assistant Surgeon—A. H. Light, May 9, 1864.

FIFTIETH REGIMENT.

Captain, Co. E—Richard Herbert, March 17, 1865; disch. Sept. 2, 1865; disability removed Oct. 26, 1865.

SEVENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT.

EIGHTIETH REGIMENT.

Surgeon—J. L. Shirk, June 23, 1863; killed December 29th, by guerrillas at Bardstowa, Ky.

EIGHTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

NINETY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

NINETY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

Surgeon—W. A. Barry, Jan. 27, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH REGIMENT.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SECOND REGIMENT.

Major—Reuben Reindehl, Oct. 18, 1862; resigned Aug. 9, 1864.
Surgeon—Isaac Walborn, Dec. 13, 1862; resigned Sept. 26, 1862.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

Assistant Surgeon—William Grambein, Feb. 18, 1864; must. out with 1st Pa. Cav., July 13, 1861.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

TWO HUNDRETH REGIMENT.

Captain, Co. F—Frank A. Hoffman, Sept. 1, 1864; app. brev. maj. March 25, 1865.

TWO HUNDRED AND EIGHTH REGIMENT.

Captain, Co. C—William C. J. Smith, June 3, 1865.

First Lieutenant—Alfred Crol, June 3, 1865.

Captain, Co. H—W. A. C. Oaks, June 18, 1863, 6th Regt. Pa. M., 1862.

Assistant Surgeon—J. H. Nunemacher, Sept. 15, 1862.

FIFTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Fifth Regiment, with which Capt. Ulrich's company was connected, was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 21st of April, 1861, by the choice of the following officers: R. P. McDowell, of Pittsburgh, colonel; Benjamin C. Christ, of Minersville, Schuylkill Co., lieutenant-colonel; R. Bruce Petriken, of Huntingdon, major. William Spencer was designated by Col. McDowell as adjutant. The companies, of which the regiment was composed, were hastily recruited in various sections of the State, and were the result of that outburst of patriotism which was everywhere manifested. With no opportunity for drill or company exercise of any kind, the raw recruits were marched to the State arsenal, where they drew their arms, the oldest regulation musket, and twenty rounds of cartridge, which, for want of accoutrements, were carried in their pockets. On the evening of the same day, April 21st, the regiment was placed on board a train of box cars, and moved down the Northern Central Railway in the direction of Baltimore; but, during the night, the course of travel was reversed, and the next morning found the command again in Harrisburg. The train then moved to Philadelphia, where it arrived at four o'clock on the afternoon of the 22d. Two companies were here detailed to guard some steamboats in their passage through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal to Perryville. The remaining companies moved on the following morning, by rail, for the same destination. In the evening of the same day the regiment embarked on three steamers and proceeded to Annapolis, where it was quartered in the battery and boat-houses. Remaining on duty here till April 26th, it was ordered to march on the railway towards Annapolis Junction, with the expectation that the column would be met by a train, on which it would be taken forward. But the train was found on the way off an embankment, where it had been precipitated by the malicious displacement of a rail. Arriving at the Junction, footsore and weary, it was placed in position to repel an attack, which, it was rumored, would be made during the night from Baltimore. The men slept on their arms, prepared for any emergency. On the following day, April 27th, it moved by rail to Washington, and was quartered in a building just back of the City Hall. Here it was visited by President Lincoln and Secretary Seward, each of whom spoke briefly, to the great gratification of the men.

The regiment remained quartered in the city, engaged in drill and guard duty. On the 7th of May uniforms were received from the State of Pennsylvania. On Wednesday, the 29th, the command marched out about a mile east of the city of Washington, when, for the first time, it was placed in camp. In this camp, which was called Camp Washington, the regiment remained, engaged in drill, till the 28th, when it was ordered to Alexandria, Va., where, upon its arrival, it was quartered in the city. On the 3d of June it again went into camp near the foot of Shuter's Hill, where it was assigned to the brigade of Brig.-Gen. Irwin McDowell. A portion of the brigade was daily assigned to duty in Alexandria, as city police, and the remainder detailed for labor on Fort Ellsworth, then in process of construction.

While stationed at Camp McDowell, the Fifth Regiment had a printing-press in camp, where several numbers of a large and well-executed newspaper were issued. It was headed the Pennsylvania Fifth. It was edited by John P. Ely, first lieutenant of Company G, and was principally executed by members of that company. The original articles, and the communications from members of other regiments, were, for the most part, spirited, and were interlarded with wit and humor, well suited to the leisure of the camp.

The Fifth Regiment was transferred to the brigade commanded by Col. W. B. Franklin, previous to the advance of the army upon the enemy at Bull Run, but was ordered to remain on duty at Alexandria. Consequently it did not participate in the battle which ensued, and which resulted so disastrously to our arms. On the expiration of the term of service, the regiment was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 25th of July, the men were paid and honorably discharged.

THIRTY-SIXTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

Recognizing the danger to which Pennsylvania was exposed, and finding that adequate provision did not exist by law to make the military power of the State available for its protection, Governor Curtin convened the Legislature in extra session on the 30th of April, 1861, to whom he recommended "the immediate organization, disciplining, and arming of at least fifteen regiments of cavalry and infantry, exclusive of those called into the service of the United States." In compliance with the suggestions of the Executive an act was passed to provide for arming the State, and hence were organized the famous Reserve Corps of Pennsylvania, and of which the Thirty-Sixth Regiment was the seventh in number. Its fortunes were eventful, and it was one of those commands which from battle and disease was almost completely obliterated from the army rolls. The regiment participated in all the prominent battles of the war up to the commencement of the Wilderness campaign, its losses were heavy and disastrous. Its last campaign was in May, 1864. On the 2d of that month the regiment broke camp and advanced along the Rapidan, crossing on the following day, and encamped at night in the Wilderness, near the Chancellorsville battle-ground, the Reserves occupying the centre of the line. On the following morning, quite early, it was advanced about three miles, the First Brigade resting in an open field for an hour, when it marched to the right, was deployed and advanced into the woods, where it soon met the enemy, and the battle opened. The Second Regiment was immediately deployed and advanced as skirmishers, while the Seventh and Eleventh were advanced in line of battle. Soon the skirmishers were driven in, but the enemy were met by our main force and routed, retreating into the woods in their rear. In moving forward through the dense forest in pursuit, Company B on the left, and also the right of the line, became detached from the body of the regiment, and failing to receive any orders to return or change its course pushed steadily on. Fired with patriotic ardor the men paused not, until suddenly they found the enemy closing in on their rear, with every avenue of retreat cut off. At first the firing from the rear was supposed to be from our own men, but this idea was soon dissipated by the appearance of the rebels. An effort was made to break through to the left, but was met by an unyielding resistance. The right was then tried and a detour made through the woods, but with like ill success. Finding that he had been the victim of a skillfully laid ambuscade, and that he was completely surrounded, Col. Bolinger was compelled to surrender, as further resistance would have involved a hopeless butchery of his men. But had they known the fate to which their inhuman captors were to subject them, they would doubtless have preferred slaughter upon the field to the endurance of the horrors of captivity which it was their lot to experience. Two hundred and seventy-two officers and men were captured, and were immediately marched to the rear of the rebel army at Orange Court-House, and thence to Lynchburg, Va. The enlisted men were speedily conveyed to the infamous rebel prison-pen at Andersonville, Ga., and the officers were sent to Macon, and were subsequently placed under fire of our guns at Charleston for the protection of the city,—a novel material for the bulwarks of a town in civilized warfare. The triumphant march of Sherman to the sea opened the miserable prisons of the captives after a confinement of seven months and twenty-three days, but long before relief came many had fallen victims of cruelty and starvation. Of the privates, sixty-seven died at Andersonville, a much larger number doubtless at Florence, not ascertained, while many expired on their way home, and others have died lingering deaths, the results of exposure and privation.

The sad and unlooked for event of the capture of nearly the entire regiment, from no fault of any of its officers, but happening in the chances of war at the very threshold of Gen. Grant's campaign, terminated its military career. Capt. Samuel B. King, of Company H, who had been relieved, at his own request, on the day on which the battle of the Wilderness was fought, from recruiting service in Pennsylvania, returned to the division and was assigned to the command of those who escaped capture and the recruits, in all numbering one hundred and ten. This miniature battalion, the representative of the regiment, had its place in the brigade and participated in the desperate fighting which ensued up to the expiration of its term of service, when, with the division, it was ordered to proceed to Harrisburg, where on its arrival an enthusiastic welcome from the Governor and military authorities awaited it.

SIXTY-FOURTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry was recruited under the direction of David Campbell, of Pittsburgh. Col. Campbell had commanded the Twelfth Pennsylvania in the three months' service. Although the Sixty-fourth was organized early in the autumn of 1861, as late as March, 1862, only six companies were fully mounted, owing to the difficulty in securing suitable horses. On the 12th of March Col. Campbell resigned to take command of the Fifth Cavalry, and Lieut.-Col. Childs was promoted to succeed him. A portion of the regiment was in the Peninsula campaign of 1862. In the Gettysburg campaign it was under Pleasonton, subsequently with Sheridan on the the Rapidan, closing its gallant services in the different engagements around Petersburg, which culminated in the breaking of the enemy's lines, the evacuation of Richmond, and the virtual ending of the civil conflict.

EIGHTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

This regiment was recruited and organized in the autumn of 1861. On the 23d of September, 1864, the original term of service having expired, the regiment, with the exception of veterans and recruits, was ordered to York, where, on the 13th of October, it was mustered out of service. The veterans and recruits were consolidated into a battalion of five companies, under the command of the senior captain, Edgar M. Ruhl, who was killed at the battle of Cedar Creek on the 19th of October, 1864. In March, 1865, five new companies were assigned to the battalion, bringing it up to the full strength of a regiment. One of these, Company I, commanded by Capt. Solomon Cover, was recruited in Dauphin and Lebanon Counties. On the 2d of April, 1865, it participated in a charge upon the works before Petersburg. It was also engaged at Sailor's Creek on the 6th. On the 29th of June it was mustered out with the regiment at Alexandria.

CHAPTER XVI.

The War for the Union (Continued)—History of the Ninety-Third Regiment and Roster of Officers and Men.

NINETY-THIRD REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

ON the 12th of September, 1861, James M. McCarter, a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, stationed at the time at Lebanon, and who had been chaplain of the Fourteenth Regiment in the three months' service, received authority from the Secretary of War to raise a regiment of infantry. A call was published on the following day, and a camp of rendezvous established at the fair-grounds, near the borough of Lebanon. In less than one month's time its ranks were full. A regimental organization was effected by the selection of the following field-officers: James M. McCarter, colonel; John W. Johnston, lieutenant-colonel; and John C. Osterloh, major.

ON the 5th of November, before leaving Lebanon, a handsome silk flag was presented to the Ninety-third by that true friend of the soldiers, Hon. G. Dawson Coleman, and a few days after, on the 8th, the regimental flag was presented by Governor Curtin. The flag was received by Col. McCarter and placed in the hands of Henry Fittery, regimental color-bearer and guard, who bore it aloft, honorably and bravely, until shot down by rebel bullets, while advancing on the foe.

While in camp the regiment was supplied with everything that could contribute to the comfort of the men by the people of the town and county of Lebanon, and a liberal sum of money was contributed for the support of the families of those who enlisted. An excellent band was attached to the regiment.

ON the 27th of November the regiment left Lebanon and proceeded directly to Washington, where, after a brief stay at the Soldiers' Rest, it went into camp at Kendall Green, and drill and camp duty was systematically commenced. Two weeks later it moved about two miles farther to the east, and on the 2d of December across the East Branch, to near Fort Good Hope, Md. It was at first armed with Belgian rifles, but subsequently, and before the opening of the Peninsula campaign, with Springfield muskets. On the 22d of January, 1862, it moved to Tenallytown, and was here assigned to Peck's brigade of Smith's (subsequently Couch's) division. On the 10th of March it moved with the whole army on the Manassas campaign, and after remaining six days in bivouac at Prospect Hill returned to the camp which it had left. On the 26th it embarked for the Peninsula, and until after the evacuation of Yorktown by the enemy on the 4th of May it was posted in the vicinity of Warwick Court-House, where it was employed in constructing rifle-pits and forts along the Warwick River. The command suffered severely while here from chills and fevers.

ON Sunday, May 4th, the regiment moved rapidly forward in the direction of Williamsburg and bivouacked at night by the roadside. Early on the following morning the march was resumed, and at half-past two P. M. it was ordered into position upon the middle front of the brigade, the right joining the One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania, and the left extending to the rear of the Fifty-fifth New York. "About two-thirds of the command," says Col. McCarter in his official report, "were in position when the charge of the enemy was made and the fire of our right wing, under direction of Lieut.-Col. Johnston, began. The enemy's charge was led by a squadron of cavalry. From the guns of Fort Magruder, and a smaller one on the extreme right of the bridge, from four pieces of artillery posted in front and not five hundred yards distant, and from cavalry and infantry, a perfect shower of missiles was poured upon our line. For three hours the answering fire of the regiment was incessant, commanding from its position the openings of two roads, on either side of which were felled trees and bushes. At the end of this time the right and centre had expended forty-five rounds, and were out of ammunition. The two companies on the left, Company B, Capt. Arthur, and Company G, Capt. Maitland, had been posted by me in rear of the left of the Fifty-fifth, under Capt. Derr, acting major, when the enemy made three attempts to flank them, but was as often driven back. The firing of the enemy on this flank having ceased, and these companies having still thirty rounds of unexpended ammunition to the man, I conducted them to a position on our extreme right, upon which the fire of the enemy was still hotly kept up. Here our silence for some minutes had induced the belief that we had retreated, and these two companies had scarcely been posted when the enemy was seen charging up the road at the distance of about one hundred yards. One volley from Company G, deliberately delivered and aimed low, checked his advance; but he continued to fire rapidly and with fearful effect. At the end of thirty minutes he had been repulsed here, and along the whole front, and with the exception of scattering musketry fire from the bushes, and shells from Fort Magruder, we were little annoyed." The loss was six killed and twenty wounded. Capt. Green B. Shearer was among the killed, and Lieut.-Col. Johnston had his horse shot under him. In a congratulatory order issued by Gen. Couch, he says, "Gen. Peck, with his brigade, had the good fortune to be in advance, and, arriving on the battle-ground at a critical time, won a reputation to be greatly envied."

Moving on up the Peninsula in advance of the corps, the regiment, on the 13th of May, acted as a support to Col. Russell, of the Sixth Massachusetts, engaged in picket duty along the Chickahominy. On the following morning a part of the Sixth crossed at Bottom's Bridge, Cols. Russell and McCarter being the first field-officers over. Subsequently Keyes's corps moved over, Couch's division taking position and fortifying at Seven Pines, and Casey's farther to the right, at Fair Oaks. Peck's brigade was ordered to occupy and guard the left flank of Couch's encampment. On the 30th, in consequence of an attack on Gen. Casey's pickets, the brigade was thrown out upon Casey's left, and at the opening of the engagement on the following day, by direction of Gen. Couch, the Ninety-third was sent to the support of Casey, taking position on his left. It was 1 P.M. when the regiment became engaged, Companies A and F being at the time on picket and narrowly escaping capture. The ground was mostly swampy where it first stood, and it was partially concealed by a low wood. Here, for about two hours, it remained under a heavy fire, but without sustaining serious loss. It was then moved across an open field to a wood opposite. This opening was crossed at double-quick and in open order, but the men were fearfully exposed, and many fell, the bullets raining in among them like hail. In this second position the enemy's fire was terrible, and here its principal loss was sustained. At nightfall the brigade retired to the breast-works, which were strengthened and made secure. The loss in this engagement was twenty-one killed, one hundred and eight wounded, and twenty-one missing. Lieut. John E. Rodgers was among the killed and Capt. Alexander C. Maitland mortally wounded. Col. McCarter, Capt. Mark, and Lieuts. Ebur, McCarter, and Keller were among the wounded. Capt. Dougherty was struck, but escaped in a most singular manner. He had upon his person a gold watch and a Bible. The watch was shattered, and the ball passed nearly through the Bible, inflicting only a slight wound, leaving its last mark on this passage, "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing, and his kingdom, preach the word." A correspondent of the New York Tribune, in his admiration of the discipline and the sterling soldierly qualities displayed by the regiment on this sanguinary field, says, "Take the case of the Ninety-third Pennsylvania. This thoroughly-trained body of troops fought, were driven back from their position, but not broken, halted at word of command, wheeled, fired, retreated, halted, loaded, and fired again and again, and came off the ground in perfect order, with their two colors flying,—a striking proof that the success of battles is in the discipline of troops." After the battle the regiment returned to its former camp on the left, and remained during the month of June, engaged in guard and picket duty.

In the movement of the army from the Chickahominy to the James, the Ninety-third acted as guard to the trains, and in the battle of the 1st of July, at Malvern Hill, under command of Capt. Long, held a position on the extreme right of the line and fronting a ravine and wood impassable for artillery and cavalry, but favorable for the approach of infantry. The enemy first opened with artillery, and finally sent forward his infantry under cover of the wood in numbers greatly superior to those opposed to them. But the advantage of the position, and the determination evinced to hold it against all odds, proved triumphant, and the enemy was beaten back at every point. The loss of the Ninety-third was about twenty.

Retiring to Harrison's Landing with the army, it remained in camp until the evacuation of the Peninsula, when it moved by transport from Yorktown to Alexandria, and thence marched to Chantilly. It supported a battery during the fierce engagement at that place on the evening of the 1st of September, and on the following morning retired with the army to Chain Bridge. Upon the opening of the Maryland campaign it moved along the Potomac towards Harper's Ferry, making a reconnaissance as far as Sandy Hook. It was then hurried to the Antietam battlefield, but took little part in the engagement, being held in reserve. When the Union army again crossed the Potomac in pursuit of the retiring enemy, the regiment was in the advance and followed closely to the banks of the Rappahannock. In the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, the regiment, now in the Sixth Corps, under Gen. Smith, of Franklin's grand division, crossed the river at the lower bridge, and was held in reserve during the engagement. At the conclusion of the action it returned to its former camp, where it went into winter quarters. On the 26th of January, Capt. John M. Mark succeeded to the colonelcy, and in February Capt. Long became acting lieutenant-colonel.

The spring campaign, under Gen. Hooker, opened on the 27th of April, when the movement upon Chancellorsville commenced. To the Sixth Corps, under Gen. Sedgwick, was assigned the duty of attacking the heights above Fredericksburg, and of advancing up the right bank of the river, to form junction with the main body. Moving from its quarters, the Ninety-third, under command of Capt. Long, crossed the Rappahannock on the morning of the 2d of May. At daybreak of the 3d the regiment advanced from its position near Fredericksburg and formed line on the left of the One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania, which, with the Sixty-second New York, had preceded it. The assault upon the heights was made by the light brigade, at the extreme right of the line, and as soon as they were carried, the brigade moved forward, and seized the works in front, where it was exposed to a heavy fire from the enemy's artillery.

The enemy retreated, and the corps, as soon as it could be formed, moved on in pursuit towards Chancellorsville. "The corps," says Gen. Wheaton, who commanded the brigade, "was formed with the greatest expedition, and pushed on to a point called Salem Heights. Here the First Division, which was in advance, found the enemy strongly posted at a cross-road near Morristown, earthworks in timber on both sides of the road, and the undergrowth filled with rifle-pits and abatis, which rendered the position to our force quite impassable. The First Division being all engaged, I was ordered by Gen. Newton to move with two regiments to the right of the road, and to take general direction of the operations on that portion of the battle-ground; a deep ravine, with a stream in it, beyond the Morrison House, was soon crossed by the Ninety-third Pennsylvania, Capt. Long, and One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania, Col. Kinkead (the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania, Col. Collier, being left supporting a battery, but came up soon after), and crossing the ridge beyond, they were soon engaged under a terrific fire of musketry from a hidden foe. To sustain this fire many minutes was evidently impossible, and I immediately dispatched staff-officers to the rear to bring up troops with which to form a second line, and others to assist in delaying the retirement of the One Hundred and Second, and Ninety-third, which was soon anticipated. Before they were pushed back, the troops on the left were driven towards us in confusion by overwhelming odds, and by the time a second line was formed, the battalions of the enemy were rushing up the ravine we had just crossed, and for a few moments it seemed hardly possible to hold our position; but the rebel regiments could not keep formed under our heavy fire, and gradually retired with heavy loss, while our most advanced line moved off in good order by its right flank, and formed in rear of the batteries behind our second. As the enemy retired, our lines advanced; but to attempt the woods again, with our present force, was not deemed possible, and we held the crest this side. Night came on, and we turned our attention to procuring ammunition and aid for our many wounded." The rebel forces now began to appear in fresh strength upon Sedgwick's front, and to work their way around upon his left flank towards Fredericksburg. He was accordingly forced to withdraw towards Banks' Ford, where a pontoon bridge had been previously laid. On the afternoon of the 4th Wheaton's brigade was attacked, but easily repulsed the assailants, taking nearly two entire regiments prisoners. During the night the command retired across the river. The loss in the engagement was six killed, among whom were Lieuts. Washington Brua and William D. Boltz, forty-four wounded, and twenty-one missing. Private John Mills died shortly after.

Until the 18th of May the regiment remained in the neighborhood of Banks' Ford, when it moved to a new camp, four or five miles north of Falmouth, where it continued, with the exception of a brief period in the "Mud Campaign," until the opening of active operations in the spring. On the 8th of June it moved up the Rappahannock, and crossing the stream on a pontoon bridge, was detailed for fatigue duty on a tête du pont, the enemy displaying much activity, and the Union cavalry, supported by infantry, being on the point of crossing for the purpose of a strong reconnoissance. After a hard day's work the regiment was withdrawn at night, receiving a vigorous shelling as it retired. The next day it again crossed, but not until near evening, and spent the whole night at work, withdrawing in the morning. The same day it again crossed, apparently with the intention of staying. On the 11th the regiment was sent on picket near the centre of the line, and was under an annoying fire all day, though farther to the right the pickets could be seen exchanging newspapers. A mutual withdrawal of pickets took place on the 13th, and then it became evident that the anticipated conflict was to be far away, and on Northern soil.

The march for Pennsylvania now commenced, and on the 1st of July it reached Manchester, Md. At eight in the evening intelligence was received of the opening of the battle at Gettysburg, and orders to march immediately to the field. The corps was promptly put in motion, the Ninety-third leading the column. At nine on the following morning the booming of cannon from the distant field was distinctly heard, and at ten the regiment crossed the State line. The men were worn out with fatigue, the day was excessively hot, and the roads dusty; but when the colors were unfurled and the drums beaten in token of entrance upon the soil of their native State, they came to a quick step, with arms at a shift, and marched on gayly, singing "Pennsylvania again." At 2 P.M. the regiment arrived at Rock Creek, by the Baltimore Pike, just in rear of the line of battle at the cemetery. At three, Gen. Sedgwick was ordered to send a brigade to the support of the Third and Fifth Corps, then hard pressed on the left. Wheaton's brigade was ordered to go, the Ninety-third being in advance (the first regiment of the Sixth Corps to get into action), Maj. Nevin in command. Gen. Sedgwick, in person, led the brigade, and formed it on the brow of a low, rocky knoll, covered with scattering trees, just to the right of Little Round Top, the left of the brigade joining with the Pennsylvania Reserves. It got into position just as the troops which had been contesting the ground in the open fields along the Emmittsburg Pike, broken, and almost annihilated, were coming back in disorder, followed by the exultant enemy. The command was ordered to lie down, and to withhold its fire until the enemy was close upon it. Had this command been heeded the whole rebel line could easily have been captured. But impatience got the better of obedience and discretion, and a premature fire was opened from a part of the line, which checked his advance, and caused him to be wary. Further attempts at concealment being useless, the whole brigade advanced, and after a short contest the rebel line was driven in tumult. In this charge the Ninety-third took twenty-five prisoners. Just before night-fall the Ninety-third was ordered forward in conjunction with a regiment of the Reserve Corps, to retake a battery which had been lost in the early part of the day. But it was soon discovered that the guns had been removed, and it returned to its place on the right of the brigade. At night the men slept for a few hours in line of battle, but spent the greater part in removing the wounded who strewed the fields in front. Since 8 P.M. of the evening previous it had marched thirty-nine miles, had fought three hours, and passed an almost sleepless night without food. During the terrible cannonade of the 3d the men hugged closely the ground, and sought shelter behind rocks and trees, and at the conclusion of the charge on the left centre, renewed the picket firing, and kept it up until dark. During the night the regiment was engaged in burying the dead and bearing off the wounded. The 4th of July was celebrated at the front, the regiment being ordered upon the skirmish-line on the extreme left, where it suffered some loss. At two in the afternoon it was relieved, and thus ended its part in the battle. The loss was eight killed and twenty-one wounded.

On the 5th it was ascertained that the enemy had retreated, and the pursuit was at once commenced.

The Ninety-third was detailed to guard the corps artillery, and assist in taking it across the mountains. This duty proved an onerous one, the men suffering much from the hardships it imposed. On the 10th it was ordered to picket and skirmish duty at the front, near Funkstown. After several days' delay, the men eager for a final issue, it was discovered that the enemy had escaped, much to their chagrin, heartily dreading another campaign in Virginia. In the campaign which was soon after entered on, the regiment participated, and at its conclusion, in the movement upon Mine Run, returned with the army to the neighborhood of Brandy Station, where it went into winter quarters in substantial log huts. A Christmas gift in the form of a beautiful silk flag, with the number of the regiment inscribed, was received to replace the tattered ensign which had been originally presented, and which had been borne in triumph in frequent fiery contests. On the 30th of December, Wheaton's brigade was detached from the main body of the army and sent by rail to Washington, and thence to Harper's Ferry. Loaded upon open freight-cars, without fire, the men suffered intensely from cold as they were borne on through the frosty night-air. The feet and hands of many were frozen, rendering amputation necessary in two cases, and in one proving fatal. The brigade marched to Halltown upon its arrival, but soon afterward returned and went into camp at Harper's Ferry. The object of the movement was to repel an anticipated demonstration of a body of the enemy under Gen. Early.

On the 7th of February two hundred and eighty-four of the men, upwards of three-fourths of the entire regiment, re-enlisted, and were given a veteran furlough. Upon their arrival home at Lebanon they were received in a manner befitting men who had for upwards of two years maintained a reputation for courage and endurance unsurpassed. Nearly the entire population came out to meet them, and at the court-house a bountiful banquet was given. Gen. Wheaton, who was not present at their departure, sent a letter to Lieut.-Col. Long, in which occurred this passage: "The great Keystone State has sent few regiments to the field who can return showing as handsome a record as the one you command."

When the regiment left Lebanon it had the following captains, every one being a new one except Capt. Boynton: Company A, Capt. Jacob P. Embich; Company B, Capt. John Fritz; Company C, Capt. Richard G. Rogers; Company D, Capt. Amos K. Kuhn; Company E, Capt. E. H. Rogers; Company F, Capt. B. Frank Hain; Company G, Capt. C. P. Sipple; Company H, Capt. C. W. Eckman; Company I, Capt. D. J. Boynton; Company K, Capt. D. C. Keller.

Soon afterwards the brigade returned to Brandy Station. In the reorganization of corps, previous to breaking winter quarters, this brigade was transferred from the Third to the Second Division of the Sixth Corps. Exchanging the smooth-bore muskets with buck and ball cartridges, with which it had been armed, for improved Springfield rifles, it set out at half-past three, on the morning of the 4th of May, for the Wilderness. Strict orders had been given not to fire the camps lest the enemy from his signal stations should be warned of the movement in progress, but custom and carelessness prevailed over discipline, and the command moved off amidst the broad glow of blazing camps. At eight o'clock on the morning of the 5th the column halted and formed line on the Chancellorsville Plank-Road, near the spot where Gen. Meade subsequently had his headquarters. At noon the Second Division, under Gen. Getty, resumed the march down the plank-road, the other two divisions, under Gen. Sedgwick, moving off to the right. After marching two miles on the plank the division filed sharply to the right, and marched down a narrow dirt-road which stretched almost due south through a thick and tangled wilderness of pine and undergrowth. It marched in column of route, without skirmishers or flankers, general officers with their staffs riding in front. In this manner it moved on to the Gordonsville and Fredericksburg Plank-Road. The Ninety-third, which was in the advance, had just crossed the plank, and was plunging again into the thick woods to the left of it, when a murderous fire was suddenly and without premonition of an enemy's presence, poured into it from the right. Without confusion the regiment halted, faced to the front, delivered one volley upon the concealed foe, and then charged, clearing the woods and establishing a line about two hundred yards in front of the dirt-road, with its right resting upon the plank. In this brief encounter, lasting less than a quarter of an hour, the regiment lost twenty-five killed and wounded, among whom were Capt. Edward H. Rogers and Lieut. Maxwell B. Goodrich mortally wounded. Division line was immediately formed, and for hours it awaited the enemy. About the middle of the afternoon a vast cloud of dust was observed far down the plank road, which rose up and obscured the western sun. Dispositions were rapidly made for an attack, brigades of the Second Corps now beginning to arrive. The Ninety-third was moved across to the right of the plank. At four, A. P. Hill's entire corps having arrived and formed without molestation in the dense woods in front, the crash came. For two hours the roar of musketry at close range was incessant. The enemy was invisible, and the fire could only be directed by the course of the enemy's missiles. At six, the regiment having suffered severely, was relieved by a regiment of the Second Corps. Resting on its arms during the night in the dirt-road, along which the Second Corps had thrown up breastworks, at four o'clock on the morning of the 6th it advanced in the second line of battle to the attack. The first, line soon came upon the enemy, who was driven two miles, when the second became the first line. After a short pause it again advanced, Gen. Wadsworth putting himself at the head of the Ninety-third and charging down the plank-road. At this juncture Longstreet, with a fresh corps, came up and made a counter-charge, a division of the Second Corps being forced back, and the whole line retiring in some confusion, though leisurely and unpursued, to the dirt-road. At 5 P.M. Longstreet made a furious assault, but was easily repulsed. In these two days of fighting the regiment lost eighteen killed and one hundred and forty-four wounded.

The 7th was comparatively quiet, a slight skirmish in the afternoon, with some cannonading. At evening it moved out and took up the line of march towards Spottsylvania, and during the 9th, 10th, and 11th was kept busy in manœuvring, digging, and fighting. On the morning of the 12th it was ordered to the support of the Second Corps, and went into position at the right of the famous "Angle," advancing to within fifty yards of the rebel works. The men dropped upon the ground for protection, and yet so destructive was his fire that the Ninety-third lost four officers and seventy-three men killed and wounded in the space of one hour. Capt. Richard G. Rogers was mortally wounded.

With the corps the regiment participated in the fierce fighting which marked the course of the army in its progress to the James, losing men almost daily, and in the engagement on the 18th of May having thirty killed and wounded. It crossed the Rapidan on the 4th of May, and entered the campaign with seven hundred and fifty men present for duty. As it marched from the trenches at Cold Harbor at its virtual conclusion it had but three hundred and twenty-five of the number left in its ranks, fifteen officers and three hundred and ten men having been either killed or wounded, and ninety-five sick and sent to the rear. But nine men were captured, and these were wounded and left on the field. "From the 4th of May until the 12th of June," says a member of the command, "the Ninety-third marched three hundred and fifty miles, made twenty-six night marches, was fifteen days without regular rations, dug thirty rifle-pits,—oftener at night than by day,—and fought in eight distinct battles. During all this time there were but five days on which the regiment or some part of it was not under fire, and neither officers or men ever took off their clothes, seldom their accoutrements, day or night. Clothes and shoes worn out were only replaced by those of dead men, and not until it arrived at the James River, far from the presence of an enemy, did the men enjoy the luxury of a bath."

Crossing the river on the 15th of June, after two days' marching, the regiment arrived in front of Petersburg. Heavy skirmishing at once commenced, and continued till the afternoon of the 18th, when a general advance was made, the line pushing close up to the enemy's works by the Norfolk Railroad, and intrenching with bayonets under a heavy fire. Capt. Jacob P. Embich was here killed, and five men wounded. Remaining in the trenches under an almost constant fire until the 22d, it was withdrawn from the right and taken to the extreme left of the line, where it supported the Third Division in an attack upon the enemy's line, losing thirteen killed and wounded. On the 29th it marched southward to the relief of Gen. Wilson returning with the cavalry from his raid. After tearing up a portion of the Weldon Railroad and meeting the cavalry, it returned to camp.

On the 9th of July it was ordered from the front, and, marching to City Point, was taken upon crowded transports to Washington, the capital being menaced by a corps of the rebel army under Gen. Early. The regiment moved rapidly through the city hailed by demonstrations of joy, arriving at the defenses, Fort Washington, just as Early's skirmishers were advancing over the esplanade. These were quickly driven back, and the skirmish line was established a half-mile out from the fort. On the 17th there was sharp skirmishing until five in the evening, when a general advance was ordered, and a sharp battle ensued. By dusk the enemy was driven at all points. Pursuit was immediately commenced, passing through Rockville and across the Potomac, and for nearly a month the corps was kept upon the march under a burning sun and upon dusty roads, seemingly to little purpose.

Gen. Sheridan assumed command of the army in the valley on the 9th of August, and an active campaign was commenced. On the morning of the 27th, while posted at Charlestown, the enemy appeared in front and quickly drove in the skirmishers. The Ninety-third was ordered forward to fill a gap in the retreating skirmish line, and formed across an open meadow. The line was advanced, but was checked and driven back to its original position. At night the Union forces were withdrawn to Halltown. On the 13th of September, in a spirited skirmish, which the Second Division had beyond Opequan Creek, the regiment supported a battery which was shelled out of position, when it withdrew, sustaining some loss in killed and wounded. At midday on the 19th the battle-line was ordered to advance and attack the enemy near Winchester. He was driven back nearly a mile, but rallied and, having broken the Union line, pushed it back to its first position. At four it again advanced, and the enemy was driven, losing artillery and a large number of prisoners. The regiment lost in the engagement seven killed and forty wounded. On the following morning pursuit of the flying enemy was vigorously pushed, and the advance came up with him at Fisher's Hill, where he was intrenched. On the 21st the brigade charged and captured Flint Hill, the position affording a full view of his intrenchments. It was intrenched and held. On the following afternoon the brigade was held in readiness, and at the word to advance leaped the breastworks and, crossing the intermediate ravine under a murderous fire of infantry and artillery, charged up the hill, over skillfully-laid obstructions, and carried the enemy's works, capturing a battery of six Rodman guns. The loss was twenty-four in killed and wounded. Capt. Jacob Brower was mortally wounded. The color-sergeant, William Smith, displayed unusual gallantry, carrying the flag steadily up in the face of the battery, and had both legs shot off by a close discharge. After pursuing the enemy up the valley beyond Staunton, taking many prisoners, the army returned and took position behind Cedar Creek.

During the month of October, Maj. Nevin recruited one hundred and eighty men at Pittsburgh, and as the original Company G had become much reduced, the few men remaining were distributed to other companies, and a new Company G was organized from the recruits, commanded by Capt. Kuhn.

On the morning of the 19th of October the enemy attacked the Union army at Cedar Creek, and drove it back nearly four miles. The Ninety-third was posted upon a ridge when the rout commenced, and with other troops repelled several assaults; but the line was finally outflanked and forced back. At 2 P.M. an order came from Gen. Sheridan, who had now arrived on the ground, that if the enemy was repulsed when attacked he was to be followed up without further orders. At three Gen. Sheridan rode along the line, saying, as he came to the Ninety-third, "We must sleep in our old camp to-night." The battle soon opened, and for an hour the fighting was very severe; but he at length gave way, and his rout was complete, the Union line following, taking guns and prisoners at every step. After the battle the regiment lay quietly in camp near Strasburg for nearly a month. On the 28th of October the term of the men who did not re-enlist expired, and they were mustered out of service to the number of about one hundred.

Early in November the regiment was ordered to Philadelphia, where, upon its arrival, it was assigned to duty in the city, and remained until after the Presidential election, when it returned to camp at Winchester. About the middle of December, with the corps, it returned to the lines in front of Petersburg, where it went into winter quarters. Through the exertions of Chaplain Joseph S. Lane, a chapel tent was erected, where during the winter evenings religious services were held, and the literary society of the regiment met. During the winter, several hundred recruits were received, bringing up its strength to near the minimum standard.

On the 25th of March, 1865, the brigade was ordered to advance upon the enemy's works, and test the strength of the forces occupying them. The space in front was open, and over this the command charged to the summit immediately in front of his picket line of trenches. Here was some delay, other parts of the line not having come up, and confusion ensued; but order was soon restored, the line again went forward across the plain, captured the outer picket trenches and charged up a second hill, where was his main line. Here the brigade halted, and for a short time was subjected to a severe enfilading fire. It was soon ascertained that the enemy was present in full force, and the command was rapidly withdrawn. The loss in this brief engagement was fifteen killed and one hundred and thirty-six wounded. Capt. George W. Mellinger was among the killed.

At midnight of April 2d the regiment, under command of Capt. B. Frank Hean, moved to the front intrenchments in line of battle, forming on the picket line in front of Battery Gregg, and at four in the morning, with the rest of the brigade, was ordered to charge the enemy's works, which were carried after an obstinate struggle, the colors of the Ninety-third being the first planted upon his ramparts. After moving a short distance towards Hatcher's Rnn, the command was ordered to return towards Petersburg. In executing this order the regiment was brought in front of a rebel battery, which opened with grape and canister. At this juncture Sergt. Hiram Layland led a squadron to the left of the battery to outflank it, and, coming up within a short distance, opened fire, shooting several of the battery horses, and causing the men to desert their guns. At the same time the line in front charged. Passing on a short distance, the line halted and threw up intrenchments. The loss was two killed and thirty-one wounded. In the first charge upon the enemy's breastworks Sergt. Charles Marquette distinguished himself by capturing a rebel flag, for which he received a medal of honor.

During the night the enemy evacuated Petersburg, and on the following morning the corps moved south to Burkesville Junction. On the 6th the regiment participated in the battle of Sailor's Creek. On the 9th Lee surrendered, and soon afterwards the corps made a forced march to Danville, to co-operate with Sherman for the defeat of Johnston. After remaining in camp here for several weeks, it returned by rail to Richmond, and thence to Washington, where, on the 27th of June, it was mustered out of service.

In the rolls which follow, we omit all save those recruited in Lebanon County in full or in part.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEENTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

With the exception of Companies D and G, whose rolls are herewith given, this regiment was principally recruited in Philadelphia. The companies mentioned contained recruits from Cambria, Lebanon, and Lancaster Counties, and as it is a difficult task to designate those from the county of Lebanon, we are compelled to give the entire rolls. The history of the command was an eventful one, and ere its term of service expired, by casualties, sickness, etc., it had become reduced by the forepart of the summer of 1864 to seven officers and eighty-four men present for duty. Accordingly, by special order of the War Department, it was consolidated into three companies and incorporated with the One Hundred and Tenth Regiment, with which it served until the close of the war, and mustered out of service with that organization on the 28th of June, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH REGIMENT
 PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

This regiment belonged to the famous "Bucktail Brigade" of the civil war. Of the important services of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Regiment, our limits will not allow us to present such a record as would be satisfactory. Capt. Bossler's company, it is true, was an important factor in the make-up of the command whose men were so widely distinguished for their hardy habits, skill in the use of the rifle, and their gallantry on the battle-fields of the Republic. At Gettysburg they especially distinguished themselves, and there and in the Wilderness Company C lost heavily. At the former terrible struggle of three days the conduct of officers and men of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth was heroic. "No language," said Col. Stone in his report, "can do justice to them, — to the coolness with which they watched and waited under a fierce storm of shot and shell the approach of the enemy's overwhelming masses, to their ready obedience to orders, and prompt and perfect execution, under fire, of all the tactics of the battle-field, to the fierceness of their repeated attacks, and to the desperate tenacity of their resistance. They fought as though each man felt that upon his own arm hung the fate of the day and the nation. Nearly two-thirds of my command fell on the field. Every field-officer, save one, was wounded and disabled." The regiment was mustered out of service on the 24th of June, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SECOND REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Seventeenth Cavalry participated in most of the engagements in which Gregg's and Buford's Cavalry so greatly distinguished themselves during the war. They were with Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley. That gallant officer reached the army just as it was moving on its last campaign, and he at once took the van. At Stony Creek the cavalry became engaged and the Second Brigade was hastened forward to the support of Davies' Division, which was forced back, the Seventeenth losing a number wounded and missing in the engagement. At daylight of the 1st of April fighting was renewed, the Union lines charging the enemy in his works, the division capturing six hundred prisoners and two battle-flags. The loss in the Seventeenth was severe, Capt. James Ham being among the killed, and Capts. English, Doneho, Reinhold, and Lieut. Anglun among the wounded. Rapid marching and hard fighting continued until the 6th, when Gen. Ewell, with one wing of the rebel army, was captured. From that point the cavalry kept up a running fight with the enemy's advance until he reached Appomattox Court-House, where the whole rebel army was forced to lay down its arms. In securing this joyful result the cavalry, led by Sheridan, contributed largely, the Seventeenth sustaining its hard-earned reputation for gallantry to the last. From Appomattox the regiment returned to Petersburg, and after a week's rest marched to the neighborhood of Washington, where it remained in camp until its final muster out of service, on the 16th of June. A detachment of this regiment was consolidated with parts of the First and Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry Regiments, forming the Second Provisional Cavalry, and remained in service until the 7th of August, when it was mustered out at Louisville, Ky.

In his farewell order to the Seventeenth, Gen. Devin says, "In five successive campaigns, and in over three score engagements, you have nobly sustained your part. Of the many gallant regiments from your State none has a brighter record, none has more freely shed its blood on every battle-field from Gettysburg to Appomattox. Your gallant deeds will be ever fresh in the memory of your comrades of the Iron Brigade and the First Division. Soldiers, farewell!"

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

Companies A, D, F, G, and H of this regiment were from the county of Schuylkill; B, C, and I from Lebanon, E from Perry, and K from Danphin. It was organized at Camp Curtin during the months of October and November, 1862, with the following field-officers: Daniel Nagle, of Schuylkill County, colonel; Zaccur P. Boyer, of Schuylkill County, lieutenant-colonel; Grant Weidman, of Lebanon County, major. On the 30th of November it moved to Washington, whence it was ordered to Suffolk, Va., but before reaching Fortress Monroe its destination was changed to Norfolk. Upon its arrival there it reported to Gen. Veile, and was assigned to duty in guarding the approaches to the town at Camp Veile, three miles out. Here the regiment was thoroughly drilled. Subsequently two companies were stationed at Norfolk, one at Kempsville, twelve miles distant, one at the entrenched lines, an officer and twenty men at Sewell's Point, a non-commissioned officer and twenty-five men at Cape Henry Light-House, two companies at the David's Mill Bridge, a non-commissioned officer and six men for guard to the mail-boat "Arrow," running through the Albemarle Canal to Roanoke, a guard at the Indian Pole Bridge, a guard at Great Bridge, a guard at the Princess Anne road, and a guard along Farmers' Creek. These detachments were regularly relieved at intervals of a week. Early in May, 1863, the regiment was ordered to Norfolk for provost duty, where it remained until the 9th of July. It was then sent with the One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Pennsylvania to Washington, and thence to Frederick, Md., reporting to Gen. Meade, who was moving in pursuit of the rebel army in its retreat from Gettysburg. It was immediately ordered to report to Gen. Howard, in command of the Eleventh Corps, and was assigned to the First Brigade of the Second Division, in which it was associated with the Twenty-seventh and Seventy-third Pennsylvania, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth and One Hundred and Fifty-fourth New York Regiments. It was now subjected to long and tedious marches, to which it was little accustomed, and was finally settled in duty to guard the Orange and Alexandria Railroad. On the 13th of August, its term of service having expired, it was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 17th, it was mustered out.

TWO HUNDRED AND NINTH REGIMENT.

Companies A and F of this regiment were from Cumberland County, B and I from York, C from Cambria, D from Franklin, E from Columbia, G from Adams, H from Lehigh, and K from Lebanon. The regiment was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 16th of September, 1864, by the choice of the following field-officers: Tobias B. Kauffman, formerly major of the First Reserve Regiment, colonel; George W. Frederick, lieutenant-colonel; John L. Ritchey, major. A considerable number of officers and men had served in other organizations, the experience thereby gained proving of great advantage in disciplining the raw recruits. Immediately after its organization it moved for the front, and, passing up the James River, landed at Bermuda Hundred. It was placed in camp at Camp Potter, where it remained two weeks, and was then posted upon the advanced line to the left of Fort Harrison, midway between the James and Appomattox Rivers. Soon after taking position, Capt. John B. Landis, with three lieutenants and one hundred and thirteen men, was detached from the regiment and assigned to duty in garrisoning redoubt Carpenter, on the left bank of the James. Company and battalion drill was here prosecuted with what success it was possible, with a large proportion of the command almost constantly on exhausting duty on picket and in garrison, and by great diligence and efficiency on the part of its officers it attained a good degree of discipline. During the engagement at Chapin's Farm, or Fort Harrison, the regiment was ordered upon the parapet, creating the impression upon the enemy that a charge upon his flank was about to be delivered. The real charge upon the front was heroically made, and the fort was captured.

On the night of the 17th of November the enemy made an attack upon the picket-line in considerable force. Col. Kauffman, who was division officer of the day, Capt. Henry Lee, and Lieut. Thomas J. Hendricks, with nineteen men, fell into the enemy's hands, and were held as prisoners until near the close of the war. The troops upon the main line were ordered out, and the attack was handsomely repulsed. In addition to the loss by capture, one man was killed and two were wounded. On the 24th the regiment was transferred, with other Pennsylvania regiments with which it had been brigaded, from the Army of the James to the Army of the Potomac. It was assigned to duty with the Ninth Corps, and was soon after brigaded with the Two Hundredth and Two Hundred and Eighth Pennsylvania Regiments, forming the First Brigade, Col. Charles W. Diven commanding, of the Third Division. The regiment was encamped on the commanding ground near Meade Station, the division, which was in command of Gen. Hartranft, being posted as a reserve to the other two divisions. During the winter the regiment was engaged in drill, in fatigue duty upon fortifications, and in the construction of roads, and was out upon occasional demonstrations upon the left.

At a little before daylight, on the morning of the 25th of March, 1865, the regiment was aroused by rapid and heavy firing in its front, and it was soon apparent that the lines, which were held by Gen. Wilcox's division, had been broken, and Fort Steadman, which was in its immediate front, and which, by daylight, was in full view, had been captured. Gen. Wilcox, whose directions, in case of an emergency, the regiment was instructed to obey, had ordered it under arms, and in motion for the protection of his threatened rear. At this juncture Gen. Hartranft appeared on the ground, and assumed personal supervision of his command. While the Two Hundred and Eighth was moving upon the extreme left of the break, and Hartranft personally was moving with the Two Hundredth upon the right front, the Two Hundred and Ninth was sent down a ravine, where it was under partial shelter, to come in upon the right, where it was joined by two skeleton regiments from Michigan, the Second and Seventeenth. "I had scarcely got my regiment in position," says Lieut.-Col. Frederick, in his official report, "when the same aid informed me that it was Gen. Hartranft's order that I should immediately, with the Two Hundredth Pennsylvania, charge the hill in my front, which was then held by the enemy. I at once gave the order to charge, and the regiment moved forward under a very heavy fire of musketry and artillery, gaining a line of works running across the open field, over which we were advancing. Halting for a moment, we again advanced, gaining a ditch near the hill occupied by the enemy. Here we were shelled from both front and rear. It was here also that the gallant Lieut. Hugh Jones, commanding Company C, fell, pierced through the head by a musket-ball. We remained in the ditch some time, when, noticing the enemy retreating, we poured into them a murderous fire, which was continued until I saw the Two Hundredth, which was on my left, preparing, as I supposed, to charge. I immediately ordered my regiment to charge likewise, and forward we went, not an officer nor a man halting or faltering until our advance line was gained and our colors were planted on the works. I am satisfied that they were the first colors planted on the works. My officers and men all did their duty so well that it would seem invidious to make any distinctions. Yet I feel it my duty to make honorable mention of Sergeants Stiles and Humphreys, color-bearers, who were always to be seen in the advance. A considerable number of prisoners were sent to the rear, estimated at three hundred and fifty." The loss in the engagement was five killed and fifty wounded. In a general order issued after the battle, Gen. Parke, who commanded the Ninth Corps, says, "The Major-General commanding congratulates the corps on this auspicious result. It will be a source of pride to him and them that so heavy and desperate an attack upon their lines was repelled by them before the arrival of the supports promptly and cordially furnished from the other corps. The gallantry and steadiness of the troops engaged, which so brilliantly retrieved a momentary disaster, and converted it into a victory, merit and receive his warmest commendation and gratitude."

Preparations were made for a determined assault on the enemy's works, by the division, at daylight on the morning of the 2d of April. Lieut.-Col. McCall, who commanded the brigade, massed his force, by order of Gen. Hartranft, near the Avery House at 1 A.M. Two hours later he led it to the front of Fort Sedgwick, and formed it in column of regiments, just inside the picket line, as a reserve to the Second Brigade, which was formed in a similar manner outside. At four o'clock the signal to advance was given, and the regiment moved at double quick, following closely the column. At the picket line there was a momentary check, occasioned by meeting numbers who came running back, and reporting a repulse. These were quickly rallied, and the command again went forward. As it came upon the open space in front of the rebel works it was exposed to a fearful fire of infantry and artillery, but, without faltering, it pressed forward and gained the hostile front, capturing many prisoners, and turning the guns of the fort and batteries upon the enemy. In common with the division, it succeeded in holding the captured line, though hard pressed by the rebels, nettled at their loss. At night the firing gradually died away, and a heavy picket line was thrown out, the enemy's chevaux-de-frise being moved to the opposite side of his works. The command was early astir, and at daylight the pickets cautiously advanced. They soon found that the enemy had gone, and when the columns, which were immediately put in motion, reached the city of Petersburg, they found that also abandoned. The Two Hundred and Ninth was sent to the left, to communicate with troops of the Sixth Corps. After remaining in and about the city until noon, the regiment returned to camp. The loss in the engagement was seven killed and fifty-two wounded. Capt. James P. McCullough was among the killed, Maj. Ritchey and Lieuts. Henry A. Bigler and Baltzer Shugar among the wounded. The division was now ordered to take charge of the army trains, and moved with them along the South Side Railroad, repairing the track as it went, until it reached Nottoway Court-House, where it was halted, and where the regiment remained until the 20th, the rebel army having surrendered on the 9th. From here it returned to City Point, and thence to Alexandria, where it went into camp, and was held until the 31st of May, when the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment was mustered out of service.

In the Twenty-sixth Regiment, Emergency troops of 1863, were Maj. L. L. Greenawalt, of the field and staff, and Capt. John C. Brooks' company of Lebanon, for which, see Dauphin County History.

FORTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT, EMERGENCY TROOPS OF 1863.

Mustered in July 2-8, 1863; discharged Aug. 26, 1863.

The invasion of Pennsylvania in the summer of 1863 was the cause of the call by Governor Curtin for Emergency troops, in obedience to which the following regiment was organized. The battle of Gettysburg resulting disastrously to the Confederate arms, the militia were no longer required in the Cumberland Valley. At this period serious apprehensions of trouble in the mining regions necessitated a delay in the mustering out of the Emergency troops. The Forty-eighth Regiment were sent to Scranton, where they remained until the latter part of August, when they were mustered out of service.

During the years which have elapsed since the civil war much might be written concerning—and yet all could be comprised in a few words—National Progress and Prosperity. Lebanon County has made rapid advancement in all that appertains to increase in population, resources, and industrial statistics. A glance at the records of the census of 1880 shows how rapid the strides the county is making in every direction.

CHAPTER XVII.

Officers of the County—Dr. Dady—The Baber Murder—Books, Authors, and Publications, etc.

OFFICERS FOR LEBANON COUNTY.

PRIOR to the formation of the county, officers representing the county will be found in the lists of those of Dauphin County, to which we refer our readers.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENTS.

John H. Kluge was commissioned July 5, 1854, re-elected June, 1857, and resigned Dec. 1, 1858. Franklin Phillips was appointed to serve the unexpired term. He died in office, and Henry Houck was appointed Aug. 11, 1859. He was elected three times, and resigned March 9, 1868.

William G. Lehman was appointed March 9, 1868, to serve the unexpired term. He was twice elected, and resigned Jan. 1, 1875. Cyrus Boger was appointed to serve the unexpired term.

The present efficient incumbent, William B. Boden-horn, was commissioned June 7, 1875.

DOCTOR DADY.

It was at Annville that Dr. Dady, the noted impostor of the last quarter of the past century, first commenced, by aid of his fascinating eloquence, to gull the honest Germans. To show what may be done among a people believing implicitly "men un-tried," an account of the doctor's operations is given.

The doctor was a German by birth, who came to this country with the Hessians during the Revolution. Possessing a fascinating eloquence in the German language, and being very fluent in the English, he was afterwards employed as a minister of the gospel by uninformed but honest Germans. He preached in Annville and various parts of this region, and when the sacerdotal robe could no longer be subservient to his avaricious views, he laid it aside and assumed the character of a physician. As such, after several unsuccessful attempts here, he went to York County and dwelt among the poor inhabitants of a mountainous part thereof (now within the limits of Adams County), where, in various artful ways, he preyed on the purses of the unwary. Rice Williams, or rather Rainsford Rogers, a New Englander, and John Hall, a New Yorker (both of whom had been plundering the people of the Southern States by their wives), came to the house of Clayton Chamberlain, a neighbor of Dady, in July, 1797. On the following morning Dady went to Chamberlain's, and had a private conversation between Williams and Hall, before breakfast. After Dady had left them, Williams asked Chamberlain whether the place was not haunted. Being answered in the negative, he said it was haunted, that he had been born with a veil over his face, could see spirits, and had been conducted thither sixty miles by a spirit. Hall assented to the truth of this. In the evening of the same day they had another interview with Dady. Williams then told Chamberlain that if he would permit him to tarry overnight he would show him a spirit. This being agreed to, they went into a field in the evening, and Williams drew a circle on the ground, around which he directed Hall and Chamberlain to walk in silence. A terrible screech was soon heard proceeding from a black ghost (!!!) in the woods, at a little distance from the parties, in a direction opposite to the place where Williams stood. In a few minutes a white ghost appeared, which Williams addressed in a language which those who heard him could not understand; the ghost replied in the same language. After his ghostship had gone away, Williams said that the spirit knew of a treasure which it was permitted to discover to eleven men. They must be honest, religious, and sensible, and neither horse-jockeys nor Irishmen.

The intercourse between Williams and Dady now ceased to be apparent, but it was continued in private. Chamberlain, convinced of the existence of a ghost and a treasure, was easily induced to form a company, which was soon effected. Each candidate was initiated by the receipt of a small sealed paper, containing a little yellow sand, which was called "the power." This "power" the candidate was to bury under the earth to the depth of one inch, for three days and three nights, performing several absurd ceremonies, too obscene to be described here. A circle, two feet in diameter, was formed in the ground, in the centre of which there was a hole six inches wide and as many deep. A captain, lieutenant, and three committee-men were elected. Hall had the honor of the captaincy. The exercise was to pace around the circle, etc. This, it was said, propitiated and strengthened the white ghost, who was opposed by an unfriendly black ghost who rejoiced in the appellation of Pompey. In the course of their nocturnal exercises they often saw the white ghost; they saw Mr. Pompey, too, but he appeared to have "his back up," bellowed loudly, and threw stones at them. On the night of Aug. 18, 1797, they undertook to get instructions from the white ghost. It was done in the following manner: he took a sheet of clean, white paper, and folded it in the form of a letter, when each member breathed into it three times; this being repeated several times, and the paper laid over the hole in the centre of the circle, the instructions of the ghost were obtained. The following is a short extract from the epistle written by the ghost: "Go, and do right, and prosper, and the treasure shall be yours. I am permitted to write this in the same hand I wrote in the flesh for your direction—O—. Take care of your powers in the name and fear of God, our protector; if not, leave the work. There is a great treasure,—four thousand pounds apiece for you. Don't trust the black one. Obey orders. Break the enchantment, which you will not do until you get an ounce of mineral dulcimer elixir; some German doctor has it. It is near, and dear, and scarce. Let the committee get it, but don't let the doctor know what you are about; he is wicked." The above is but a small part of this precious communication. In consequence of these ghostly communications, a young man named Abraham Kephart waited, by order of the committee, on Dr. Dady. The doctor preserved his elixir in a bottle sealed with a large red seal, and buried in a heap of oats, and demanded fifteen dollars an ounce for it. Young Kephart could not afford to give so much, but gave him thirty-six dollars and three bushels of oats for three ounces of it. Yost Liner, another of these wise committee-men, gave the doctor one hundred and twenty-one dollars for eleven ounces of the stuff. The company was soon increased to thirty persons, many of whom were wealthy. Among those who were most miserably duped may be mentioned Clayton Chamberlain, Yost Liner, Thomas Bigham, William Bigham, Samuel Togert, John McKinney, James Agnew the elder, James McCleary, Robert Thompson, David Kissinger, George Sheckley, Peter Wikeart, and John Phillips. All these and many other men were, in the language of the indictment, "cheated and defrauded by means of certain false tokens and pretenses, to wit, by means of pretended spirits, certain circles, certain brown powder, and certain compositions called mineral dulcimer elixir, and Deterick's mineral elixir."

But the wiles of these impostors were soon exerted in other parts. The following is an account of their proceedings in and about Shrewsbury township, in York County. Williams intimated that he had received a call from a ghost resident in those parts, at the distance of forty miles from Dady's. Jacob Wister, one of the conspirators, was the agent of Williams on this occasion. He instituted a company of twenty-one persons, all of whom were, of course, most ignorant people. The same and even more absurd ceremonies were performed by these people, and the communications of the ghost were obtained in a still more ridiculous manner than before. The communications mentioned Dr. Dady as the person from whom they should obtain the dulcimer elixir, as likewise a kind of sand which the ghost called the "Asiatic sand," and which was necessary in order to give efficacy to the "powers." Ulrich Neaff, a committee-man of this company, paid to Dr. Dady ninety dollars for seven and a half ounces of the elixir. The elixir was put into vials, and each person who had one of them held it in his hand and shook it as he pranced around the circle. On certain occasions he anointed his head with it, and afterwards, by order of the spirit, the vial was buried in the ground. Paul Baliter, another of the committee-men, took with him to Dr. Dady's a hundred dollars to purchase "Asiatic sand," at three dollars per ounce. Dady being absent, Williams procured from the doctor's shop as much sand as the money would purchase. In this instance Williams cheated the doctor, for he kept the spoil to himself, and thence arose an overthrow of the good fraternity. Each of them now set up for himself. Williams procured directions from his ghost that each of the companies should dispatch a committee to Lancaster to buy "Deterick's mineral elixir" of a physician in that place. In the mean time Williams and his wife went to Lancaster, where they prepared the elixir, which was nothing but a composition of coppers and Cayenne pepper. Mrs. Williams, as the wife of John Huber, a German doctor, went to Dr. Rose with a letter dated "thirteen miles from Newcastle, Delaware," which directed him how to sell the article, etc. The enormity of the price aroused the suspicion of Dr. Rose. In a few days the delegates of the committee arrived, and purchased elixir to the amount of seven hundred and forty dollars and forty-three cents. When the lady came for the money she was arrested, and the secret became known. Her husband, Williams, escaped. The Lancaster expedition having led to a discovery of the tricks of the impostors, a few days after the disclosures made by Mrs. Williams, an indictment was procured in the criminal court of York County against Dr. John Dady, Rice Williams, Jesse Miller, Jacob Wister the elder, and Jacob Wister the younger, for a conspiracy to cheat and defraud. The trial took place in June following, and resulted in the conviction of Wister, the elder, and Dr. Dady, the former of whom was fined ten dollars and imprisoned one month in the county jail, the latter fined ninety dollars and sentenced to two years' confinement in the penitentiary at Philadelphia. Dady had just been convicted of participating in the conspiracy in Shrewsbury, where he and Hall were found guilty of a like crime in Adams County, whereupon Hall was fined one hundred dollars and sent to the penitentiary for two years, and Dady was fined one hundred and sixty dollars and sentenced to undergo an additional servitude of two years in the penitentiary, to commence in June, 1800, when his first term would expire. Thus ended the history of Dr. Dady, who certainly was not devoid of talent, who possessed a most winning address, and was a thorough master in quick and correct discernment of character. He came to Annville about 1784, and lived in this region some ten years, and here he first began in a small way his machinations. He reigned also for a season with undisputed sway in what was then the western part of York County. There, as at Annville, his cunning for a long time lulled suspicion to sleep. The history of his exorcisms should teach the credulous that the ghosts which appear nowadays are as material as our own flesh.

THE RABER MURDER.

It is distasteful to preserve the record of crime in whatever shape it may appear, but as the following transaction is one which caused more than local excitement a few years ago, it seems proper that some reference, brief although it may be, should be made concerning it.

Joseph Raber, a man upwards of sixty years of age, lived in a state of the most abject poverty, in a dingy, deserted charcoal-burner's hut, in a sequestered spot on the Blue Mountains known as Indiantown Gap, in Lebanon County. He had no occupation, but eked out a scanty subsistence by performing such little jobs as chance threw into his way, depending mainly upon the charity of the poverty-stricken neighborhood in which he lived. His mode of life was very primitive indeed. The hut, which he called his home, and in which he passed the heat of summer and the rigors of winter, was rudely constructed of rough-hewn logs, and was so low that an ordinary-sized man could not stand erect in it. There was no floor, but hard-beaten earth, and the furniture consisted of a store-box, which served the purpose of table, wash-stand, bureau, and general receptacle for such household utensils as the shanty contained, and a wooden bench, made on the very original plan of driving stakes into the ground and placing a plank on top. In this hut lived, with old man Raber, Polly Kreiser, who was his housekeeper.

Israel Brandt, whom we have reason to consider as the originator of this terrible tragedy, lived about three-fourths of a mile from Raber's hut, on the road leading through the Gap, at a place known as St. Joseph's Spring, in Union township. He kept some sort of a hotel, and, although the place was not licensed, yet he sold liquor, and his house was the rendezvous where all the rough mountaineers were went to resort to have their carousals. Among the regular frequenters of this place was Charles Drews, the oldest of the men executed, who resided about a hundred yards to the southwest.

Henry F. Wise, Josiah Hummel, and George Zechman lived along the mountains to the east, six miles from Brandt's place. Frank Stichler lived about half a mile from Brandt's.

In the latter part of July, 1878, Brandt, Hummel, Wise, and Zechman agreed among themselves to have Raber's life insured for their benefit. George W. Schweinhart, an insurance agent, living in Lebanon, was accordingly applied to make out the applications and procure the policies on the life of the old man. Whereupon Schweinhart visited Indiantown Gap, and met these parties in consultation at Brandt's house. Here the applications were made out, Wise paying the necessary fees. After the applications had been favorably received by the various companies and policies issued, Wise wrote a letter to Schweinhart, requesting him to meet Brandt, Hummel, Zechman, Raber, and himself at Lebanon, for the purpose of having the policies on old Raber's life assigned to themselves, and taking out some additional applications. At that time a policy for two thousand dollars in the Home Mutual Life Association in Lebanon was assigned to Josiah Hummel; one for one thousand dollars, in the New Era, to Israel Brandt; one for three thousand dollars to George Zechman; and one for two thousand dollars to Henry F. Wise; the sum for all amounting to eight thousand dollars. The reason given by these men to Schweinhart why these assignments were made was that Raber was a very poor man, and that they had agreed to support him. Here, then, the preliminaries of the plot were fully consummated, and it only remained to carry their hellish design into execution. The conspirators were in frequent consultation at Brandt's, having been often observed going back and forth from his house during the space of some three or four months immediately preceding Raber's death. The result of these consultations was that they agreed to employ a man who would be willing to do the job for money, ignorantly thinking that in this way they would escape the penalty of the crime, while they would reap all the benefits. This having been settled, the next step was to find a willing tool to commit the murder, which they found in the person of Charles Drews. This unhappy old man had a numerous family, and was in very straitened circumstances, and, like the murderer in Macbeth,—

"So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,
That he would set his life on any chance
To mend it, or be rid on't."

Brandt was the first of the conspirators to broach the subject to Drews, promising to give him three hundred dollars, and stating that the others would each pay him the same amount. Drews accepted, and asked Elijah Stichler, an uncle to Frank Stichler, to help drown Raber in Kitzmiller's dam. The following was their well-concocted plan: they would induce Raber to accompany them to fish in the dam with a flat. Drews was to push Raber off the flat and Stichler was to "pole over him" and drown him. Afterwards Stichler was to jump into the water to get wet, and then go to Michael Kohr's, who lived hard by, and get a change of clothing, stating that he had gotten wet in trying to save Raber from drowning. For these services Drews offered to give Stichler one hundred dollars. Stichler refused to agree to this. Notwithstanding Stichler's refusal, Drews at the time appointed went to the dam, accompanied by his son-in-law, Joseph F. Peters, who had returned home on a furlough from the regular army about that time. When they arrived at the dam they found the flat full of water, and old man Raber remarking that it was too cold to fish anyhow, the party returned home without accomplishing their infamous purpose. This attempt having proved abortive, Charles Drews engaged Frank Stichler to assist him in doing the job. Accordingly, on the 7th of December, 1878, Drews went to Raber's hut and invited him to come to his house to get some tobacco. Drews returned to his house with Raber, where Stichler was in waiting. Raber was then induced to go with them to Kreiser's, under the pretext of getting meat. The way to Kreiser's necessitated the crossing of Indiantown Creek, which is a small stream about twelve feet wide and seventeen inches deep, spanned by a plank. When the party arrived at this plank Stichler was in front, Raber next, and Drews in the rear. When Raber had reached the middle of the plank Stichler suddenly turned upon him, caught hold of his shoulders, knocked his feet from under him, threw him into the water, and jumped in on top of him and got him by the hair; and in order to keep his head under water, Drews pressed upon Stichler, and thus Raber was kept down until life was extinct. This scene was witnessed by Joseph F. Peters from an upper window in Drews' house. Having committed the deed, Drews and Stichler returned to Drews' house, where Stichler exchanged clothes. This took place some time between four and five o'clock in the afternoon, and about two hours later the neighborhood was thrown into a state of consternation by the intelligence that old man Raber was drowned in the creek. Immediately a crowd of excited people gathered around the place, but the body was left undisturbed until the arrival of the coroner, who was summoned by Brandt and Hummel. When they arrived in Lebanon Brandt became considerably intoxicated, and boastfully remarked that Raber was insured for twenty thousand dollars, and stated to the coroner that each of the men who had him insured would give him twenty dollars for a good report.

The coroner's inquest was held the following day, and resulted in a verdict that the deceased came to his death from natural causes. Raber's remains were consigned to their final resting-place on the 10th of December, and three days later Schweinhart met Brandt, Hummel, Wise, and Stichler, at Brandt's house to make out the death proofs on the policies held. At that time much suspicion began to attach to the case owing to the bad character of the parties who were known to have Raber's life insured. Nothing definite, however, was discovered until some time in January, 1879, when Joseph F. Peters appeared before John H. Speck, a justice of the peace in East Hanover township, and made oath that he had seen his father-in-law, Charles Drews, and Frank Stichler drown old man Raber in the manner before detailed. In pursuance of this information Drews, Stichler, Brandt, Hummel, Wise, and Zechman were arrested on the 4th of February, and brought before Squire William W. Murray, of Lebanon, who committed them to prison. The demeanor of these men while in the magistrate's office was characterized by much levity, showing that they did not realize the gravity of the charge that was hanging over them. On Feb. 12, 1879, a hearing under a writ of habeas corpus was given Wise, Hummel, Brandt, and Zechman before Judge Henderson, which resulted in their being remanded back to jail to await trial at court. These men having been jointly indicted for the murder of Raber, elected to be tried together at the April term of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, 1879, and were all found guilty of murder in the first degree, mainly upon the evidence of Joseph F. Peters and Lenah Peters, his wife, and daughter of Charles Drews. The trial was the most exciting that was ever held in the county, and absorbed nearly two weeks' time. While it was in progress the court-room was daily thronged with a crowd of eager listeners ready to drink in every word as it fell from the lips of witnesses. The excitement reached its climax on the evening of the day when the jury rendered its verdict, at which time the eagerness of the people was so great that the tipstaves could with difficulty keep the surging mass of humanity outside the bar. A motion was at once made for a new trial in the case of each one of the condemned, but, after argument, the application was refused to all except George Zechman, to whom a new trial was granted on the 4th of August, 1879. On Monday afternoon, August 18th, all the prisoners, with the exception of Zechman, who was granted a new trial, and Wise, who made a confession to the commonwealth's counsel on the Saturday previous, were sentenced to death by Judge Henderson. About this time Charles Drews and Frank Stichler also made confessions. The death-warrants of Drews, Stichler, Brandt, and Hummel were issued Nov. 2, 1879, by Governor Henry M. Hoyt to Sheriff Deininger, and were afterwards separately read to the prisoners. Zechman was tried at the November term of court, Henry F. Wise being one of the principal witnesses, and was acquitted by the jury. Drews and Stichler, the men who actually committed the deed, expiated their crime on the gallows in the jail-yard at Lebanon, Nov. 14, 1879. Brandt and Hummel took out a writ of error to the Supreme Court, but the assignments of error were not sustained. Sentence of death was passed on Wise Dec. 2, 1879. On March 16, 1880, his case was taken before the board of pardons by his counsel, Col. A. Frank Seltzer, who argued the case for a commutation of the death penalty to imprisonment for life, on the ground that Wise was used as a witness by the commonwealth in the trial of George Zechman. The board, however, refused to interfere. The case of Brandt and Hummel was taken before the board of pardons by their counsel, Col. J. P. S. Gobin, April 20, 1880, but as in the case of Wise, a commutation was refused.

On May 6, 1880, Brandt and Hummel made an attempt to break jail by cutting and digging out, which nearly succeeded. The death-warrants of Wise, Hummel, and Brandt were issued by the Governor March 19th, fixing May 18, 1880, as the time for their execution, when they were all three duly hanged. Brandt and Hummel asserted their innocence to the last, and in their statements to their counsel, Col. J. P. S. Gobin, W. M. Derr, Esq., and Hon. C. R. Lantz, said they had policies of insurance on Raber's life, but never advised or were connected with any plot for taking his life. According, however, to the confessions of Wise, Drews, and Stichler, Brandt and Hummel were both in the murderous conspiracy, the former (Brandt) being the leader and originator of the fiendish scheme. Wise, in his confession, said he knew nothing about the drowning of Raber, as he had withdrawn from the plot some time before, under the impression that Drews would not drown the old man. He further confessed that he, Hummel, and Zechman, thinking the drowning plot had fallen through, had conspired to have Raber poisoned, by putting rat poison in whiskey for him. This was to have been done on the Sunday following, but Raber being murdered by Drews and Stichler the Saturday before, made it not necessary to their schemes.

Charles Drews was born in Schleswig-Holstein in 1820. His father was a butcher, which trade Charles pursued until the breaking out of the Continental war of 1848. He then enlisted in the German army, fighting against Danish oppression for two years. On May 4, 1852, he arrived in New York, and came to Pennsylvania, and soon settled in Lebanon County, working in the Colman furnaces a year. Then he went to Pinegrove, and worked five years in the furnaces. There he married a Miss Kreiser, who bore him eleven children, eight of whom, with his wife, were living at his execution. He served all through the Rebellion in the Ninety-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in 1862 was made color-bearer of the regiment, and as such distinguished himself as one of the bravest of the brave. His face wore a somewhat sinister expression, and his ordinary weight was one hundred and eighty pounds. But if there was any peculiarity more characteristic of the man than anything else it was the natural baldness of his head, which was almost totally destitute of hair from his youth. His last words on the gallows were, speaking in German to Stichler, his companion, "Frank, now we are going to heaven; now we go."

Frank Stichler was born Oct. 16, 1859. His parents were of German extraction, and at the time of his birth lived at Indianton Gap. His father was a charcoal-burner by occupation, whose whole life was but one continuous struggle to keep the wolf from the door. Frank was initiated into the mysteries of charcoal-burning, in which he soon became quite proficient; when ten years of age he could chop more wood than an ordinary man. He never learned a trade; when he was not about his father's business he worked for the farmers. Bad company and evil associates ruined him. Brandt proved his evil genius, and from the time he left his father's house to take up his abode at Brandt's, dates the beginning of his downward course to the murderer's grave. Amid the associations of the regular den of thieves that rendezvoused at Brandt's he speedily paved the way for the gallows, and soon turned into the desperate boy-demon that he afterwards appears, when he remarked to Drews "that he could kill any man for money without the least compunction." His remains were buried at Indianton Gap.

Josiah Hummel was born March 19, 1849. His parents were descendants of Teutonic pioneers who came to this country nearly a century and a half ago. Up to his majority he worked for his father on his farm, and afterwards worked for some time at Brookside, Calmary, and Lincoln collieries, and in what were known as Houser's mines. He was a member of Jacobs' Lutheran Church, about three miles south of Pinegrove, and was confirmed in the faith by Rev. Elias Henry of that place. However, he was a Christian only in name. In 1877 he went to Wooster, Ohio, in quest of work, but not succeeding he returned to the mountains. He was never married. He knew Brandt from the time the latter kept the Cold Spring Hotel. He was the tallest of the "blue-eyed six," and measured nearly six feet in height. His remains were buried at Sattazahn's meeting-house.

Israel Brandt, who has always been looked upon as the Macchiavelli of the conspirators, the one who planned the murder of Raber, and who saw to it that it was properly executed, was born in North Lebanon township May 27, 1834. He was one of a family of six born to Henry Brandt, who by trade was a carpenter, and tilled a small section of land in the above-named township, and later in life filled the position of steward in the Lebanon County Almshouse. Israel learned the tailor's trade, and succeeded in building up a thriving business. He was of a fine physique, crafty in nature, but, moreover, a "hale fellow well met," ready at all times to do a favor for any one. Tiring of his occupation and being infected with the Western fever, he left for Indiana in 1850, where for about two years he led a reckless life. In 1857 he returned and settled down in Myerstown, where he married a daughter of 'Squire Hoffa. Here he was looked upon as a good fighter, and when in his cups was exceedingly quarrelsome. During the war he came to Lebanon and took charge of the Washington House. Not meeting with success he went to Illinois, there remained a year, and lost his left arm in a threshing-machine. In 1864-65 he took possession of the Cold Spring Hotel, where he was thrown into company of the worst description; the persons who generally congregated there and made it a rendezvous, being of the highest order of criminals of all classes. Here, in 1867, his wife died of consumption, and thus wifeless and his children motherless, he grew indifferent to the status in social matters, and one by one the friends of his youth deserted him. Yearly he fell in the estimation of those who knew him, until finally his own kin and kith refused him countenance. He now moved into East Hanover township and kept the "Half-Way House," and afterwards St. Joseph's Spring House, where the Raber murder was concocted and carried out. His remains were buried in the Lebanon Lutheran Cemetery.

Henry F. Wise. This man forms one of the most important factors in the terrible tragedy for which he was convicted and suffered an ignominious death on the gallows. And while he was not the originator of the crime, nor did the actual killing of old Joe Raber, nor in fact, according to his confession, knew of the murder at the time it was committed, yet the ingenious part he played in effecting the insurance on the life of the old man, his startling confession shortly after conviction, and his subsequent testimony in the trial of George Zechman, stamp him as the most remarkable personage of this confederacy of criminals. He was born in Monroe Valley, this county, June 4, 1845, and lived with his parents until he was ten years old, when the family moved to Fishing Creek Valley, a distance of six miles from St. Joseph's Spring, the scene of the tragedy. His parents were poor, honest, hard-working people. When fourteen years of age he cut railroad ties at Gold Mine Gap, and when seventeen worked at the Rousch Creek coal-mines. He joined the United Brethren Church, and remained for a year a faithful member. He married on Feb. 14, 1864, Nancy Hauer, who proved a faithful wife and devoted mother, and to whom he was fondly and deeply attached. He worked in various mines, furnaces, and collieries, and engaged in various works. He became, with his wife and her sister, converted in the Church of God, of which Rev. Israel Jay was pastor, and with them was baptized in Rousch Gap Creek. He had bought a little property, and panic times coming on he could not meet the second payment. So he was under pecuniary embarrassments when the temptation of sudden wealth by graveyard life insurance presented itself, and he could not resist it. He left two children with his wife. He was buried at the Green Point meeting-house, near his home.

George Zechman was convicted on the first trial as one of Raber's murderers, but upon his second trial, granted him by the court, he was acquitted. He was born in Berks County, Aug. 15, 1849. His parents were of German origin, and moved to Fishing Creek Valley when he was a mere stripling of a boy. He was early engaged in the boating business, and afterwards engaged in the coal-mining business, working at different times at the Lower Lorberry, Upper Rousch Creek, Williamstown, and Sheaffer mines. He married at the age of twenty-two years. After his acquittal he returned to his family in the mountains.

BOOKS, AUTHORS, ETC.

A bibliography of Lebanon County is desirable, but the preparation of it is no easy task. We present merely a brief reference to certain recent publications by Lebanon County people. About the commencement of the century, in its first decade, a large number of books were printed at Lebanon, all in the German language. It would be an interesting labor to gather up and compile a list of them, and it could be done now if some lover of history, one familiar with the German tongue, would take upon himself this duty.

Professor William J. Burnside, principal of the Lebanon High School and Academy, is the author of a popular school-book entitled "Elements of English Grammar, arranged and simplified for the Use of Beginners." It was printed by William M. Breslin, of the Advertiser office, is in its fifth edition, and is used in the schools of this and several adjoining counties. It is a neatly-printed book of some one hundred pages, compiled and edited with ability.

In 1874 and 1875, William M. Breslin, of the Advertiser, compiled and published a "Directory of Lebanon Borough," a handsomely-printed and bound volume of one hundred and eleven pages, the first publication of the kind ever attempted in the county.

In 1880, C. M. Bowman, of the Daily Times, published the "Lebanon County Census Directory," a nicely printed and bound book of two hundred and seventy-eight pages. It was published upon an entirely new plan, embracing all the features of the old style, with many others, that proved interesting and valuable. The compilation of the names in family groups also gave the work added interest, as showing the names, ages, occupation, and number in each family. It contained brief historical sketches of the county, Lebanon borough, and all the townships.

Dr. John Hittell was formerly a noted physician at Annville and Jonestown of this county. One of his sons, Theodore Hittell, is a leading politician on the Pacific slope, and a State senator in the California Legislature. Another son is John S. Hittell, an author of world-wide reputation. One of his books was entitled "A Brief History of Culture, etc.," which met with special commendation from the literary world, and another was "The History of San Francisco," which was printed in many different editions. The great work of his literary labors is "The Resources of California, comprising the Society, Climate, Salubrity, Scenery, Commerce, and Industry of the State," two volumes of four hundred and fifty-eight pages, printed by A. L. Bancroft & Co., of San Francisco, and in 1879 had run through seven editions. It was first published in 1863, and had at once immense sales on the Pacific coast and in the States. It is the acknowledged standard work on California and the resources of the Golden State, and as a literary labor was warmly received in the world of letters, and at once established the fame of its cultured author, an old Lebanon County boy, who went to the Golden State, and became distinguished as one of the great writers of the age.

"Across the Continent" is the title of an unpretending but ably-edited little volume of ninety-eight pages, of which J. H. Redsecker, of Lebanon, is the author. It comprised fourteen highly interesting and descriptive letters written by Mr. Redsecker for the Church Advocate during his trip to the Pacific slope with the Pacific Institute Excursion in 1879. They were subsequently printed in book form by the Harrisburg Telegraph Steam Printing and Binding House.

Miss Rebecca E. Kremer, of Lebanon, is the author of two books. The first is an elegantly printed volume of three hundred and fourteen pages, entitled "Bible Gems, or Manual of Scripture Lessons." It was specially designed for public schools, but was equally adapted to Sunday-schools and families. It was printed by Messrs. Lippincott, of Philadelphia, in 1870. It is largely used in Pennsylvania, and is cordially indorsed by the educators, the press, and clergy of the State. It is a compendium of all the leading historical events and great moral truths contained in the Bible and their inspired authors. Miss Kremer's second work was a volume of two hundred and ninety-four pages, printed in 1874 by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, entitled "Easy Lessons in Natural Science," and embraced a general outline of the physical constitution and phenomena of the world, and an account of the most important and interesting animals, vegetables, and minerals. It was beautifully illustrated, and designed for schools and families.

"The Artist and his Mission, a Study in Esthetics," is the title of a handsome volume issued from the press in December, 1881, whose author is Rev. William M. Reilly, Ph.D., Professor of Ancient Languages in Palatinate College, Lebanon County. He discusses the validity of the artist's method, traces his resources, and shows his mission to be a lofty one.

"The Life of Luther in Picture and Verse." This is a jubilee offering in commemoration of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Luther's small catechism. It was translated from the German of Rev. J. A. Darmstaetter by Rev. George H. Trobert, of Lebanon, who also added many original parts. It is a succinct history of the Great Reformer. Rev. Mr. Trobert is the author of many anniversary and other poems of rare excellence. He was born in Lancaster County in 1843, educated at Gettysburg College, and graduated at the Evangelical Lutheran Seminary in Philadelphia. He was ordained minister at Pottsville in 1870, and his first charge was the church at Ephrata, Lancaster, until 1873, when he went to the Elizabethtown church in same county, of which he was pastor until 1877, when he was called to the Salem Lutheran Church of Lebanon.

LEBANON TOWNSHIP.

By referring to the following outline map, or rather rough draught of Lancaster County, it will be seen that originally Lebanon township included all of now the county proper. The acts of the Assembly of the Province erecting the county of Lancaster, thus defines the boundaries of Lebanon township:

"Beginning under the aforesaid hill at the north-east corner of Peshtank; thence by the said hill easterly to the meridian of the west line of Tolpehocken Manor; thence southerly and by the said line to the hills bounding Warwick township; thence by the said hills and township westerly to the corner of Derry on Conewago; thence northerly by Derry and Peshtank to the place of beginning."

"Assuming the 'Kohtotoning Hill,' alluded to in the above records, to be the lower or southmost of the range of mountains, the three townships of Derry, Peshtank, and Lebanon, at their organization in 1729, embraced all the territory south of that mountain, which subsequently became part of Dauphin County, except that portion of Heidelberg township which was thrown into Dauphin on the separation of Dauphin from Lancaster county." The northeast corner of Lebanon township, as described above, was afterwards cut off by the division line between Berks and Lancaster Counties. The Lebanon township record above given calls for the "Kohttohtoning Hill," from the northeast corner of Peshtank to the meridian of the west line of the Tolpehocken Manor; that point at the hill has been assumed to correspond with the east line of Lebanon township, as given on Smith's map, and is found by examination of draughts in the Surveyor-General's office to correspond in position and course with the west line of Tulpehocken Manor. In old warrants and surveys, it is designated as Quitapabilla township.

Lebanon township remained intact until a division was made by the Court of Quarter Sessions in May, 1739, the northern portion to be called Bethel. In 1757 Heidelberg was erected, which included a very small part of the original township of Lebanon. The latter was in 1799 again divided, and that of Annville set off. These facts must be borne in mind, especially when reference is made to the assessment-lists or to the township officers.

Prior to 1759 no records have been found giving the officers of the township. From that period, however, until the year 1785, when the county of Dauphin was erected, we have gathered the following:

1759. Constable.—Balzer Orth.

LEBANON BOROUGH.

To George Steitz is generally given the credit for the laying out of the town of Lebanon. We find, however, that Francis Reynolds and George Steitz, both early settlers, took out warrants for adjoining tracts of land in then Lebanon township, Lancaster County. Francis Reynolds died prior to 1745, leaving his estate to his son George Reynolds, who had married Eleanor Steitz, daughter of George Steitz. George Reynolds laid out a portion of his farm in town lots prior to 1740, and shortly after he and his wife, Eleanor, conveyed a number of them to Peter Kucher. Reynolds died about the year 1762, leaving a widow and one child, Catharine Reynolds. Most of Reynolds' lots, if not his entire farm, it is probable had previously fallen into the possession of George Steitz, who seems to have been a shrewd German, and laid out additional lots in 1750. The town had originally been named for the township, LEBANON, but it being common in early times to call the town after the proprietor, notwithstanding a permanent name had been already designated, for many years it was called Steitztown. The proprietors never thus named it. As a matter of record, we give herewith, extracts from the warrant of 1753, which seems to be merely one to cover two previous warrants, those for 1737 and 1741. It will be seen that the township name is QUITOPAHILLA. In many of the original warrants, Lebanon township is thus designated:

"WHEREAS by virtue of two warrants one under the Lesser seal of the said Province bearing date the nineteenth Day of December One thousand Seven hundred and thirty-seven, and the other under the seal of the Land Office dated the Seventeenth day of March One thousand seven hundred and forty-one, there were surveyed unto George Stuyts at Stites, of the County of Lancaster, Yeoman, Two Certain Tracts of Land situated in Quitopahilla township in the said county bounded and described as follows, viz: One of them beginning at a Marked Hickory and from thence extending by vacant Land East Two hundred and fifty-three Perches to a Post thence by John Tibbins's Land North Eight Degrees East one hundred and twenty-four Perches and North five Degrees East Ninety-one Perches to a marked Black Oak thence by Hags Leichts Land South Seventy-nine degrees and an half West one hundred and Eighty-two Perches to a marked Spanish Oak and West one hundred and fifteen Perches to a marked Black Oak, thence by Vacant Land South Five Degrees East one hundred and Eighty-one Perches to the place of Beginning, containing three hundred and thirteen acres and the usual allowances of six acres Per cent. for Roads and Highways, AND the other of them Beginning at a marked Hickory a corner of his other Land and from thence extending by the Land of Ralph Whiteside South one hundred Perches to a marked Hickory, thence by Land of Widow Crier and Vacant Land North Sixty-five Degrees East one hundred and forty Perches to a marked Black Oak, thence by Vacant Land North forty Paches to a Post, thence by the said George Styts other Land West one hundred and twenty-seven Perches to the place of Beginning, containing fifty-two acres and one hundred and twenty-six Perches and the usual allowances aforesaid as in and by the several surveys of the said two tracts remaining in our Surveyor Generals office, and from them certified into the Secretaries office may appear. Now at the instance of the request of the said George Styts that we would be pleased to grant him a confirmation of the said two tracts.

"Know YE that in consideration of the sum of Fifty-six Pounds fourteen shillings lawful money of Pennsylvania to our use paid by the said George Styts his heirs and assigns by these presents. And of the yearly Quit Rent hereinafter mentioned and reserved We have given granted &c . . . to George Styts his heirs &c., To have and to hold the said Three hundred and Sixty five acres and one hundred and twenty six Perches of Land, &c . . . yielding and paying therefore yearly unto us, &c . . . at upon the Fifth day of March in every year One half Penny Sterling for every acre of the same, or value thereof in Coin Current &c . . . and in case of Non Payment thereof within ninety days next after the same shall become due, then it may be lawful &c . . .

"Witness James Hamilton, Esqr, Lt Governor of the said Province who by virtue of certain powers granted caused the great seal of said Province to be affixed at Philadelphia the Twenty second day of May One thousand seven hundred and Fifty three, the twenty sixth year of the reign of King George the second."

"Entered in the office for recording of deeds for the city and county of Philadelphia in Pat. Book A, vol. xvii, page 304, etc., the second day of March, 1753."

George Steitz died in October, 1767, and in his will leaves legacies to his brother Henry, to his stepsons John and Frederick Tibbins, to his daughter Eleanor, widow of George Reynolds, and his grandchild, Catharine Reynolds, most of his estate is bequeathed,—a proviso to the bequest to his granddaughter is that she is "to marry a man of a German descent or offspring." Catharine subsequently married Thomas Clark, of Scotch-Irish descent.

The precise date of the laying out of the town is not known, and we have vainly made research for the original plot. The earliest map of the town is reproduced and given in this connection. It was of more recent years, and gives the consolidation of the different additions to Lebanon. The road to Lancaster was laid out and opened in 1753. Market Street, now Ninth, from the southern border line to Lehman Street, is a portion of said road. At Lehman Street it made a bend to the east, passing where now are the gardens of citizens on the east of Ninth Street. Near Guilford Street it made a turn to the west, and kept on to the old distillery, where it then ended, but was afterwards joined at that place by the Jonestown road. In the land sales by the early proprietors ten per cent. was allowed for roads. The house of George Gloninger was a place of usual resort for the refugees from the Indian depredations in 1756 to 1760. Robert Proud, in his history of the Province between 1760 and 1773, says the town was laid out in 1759, and that in 1772 it had above two hundred good dwelling-houses, many of them large and well built of stone, dug out of the ground where the houses stood, and principally inhabited by Germans. Rev. John George Lochman, in his writings, said, "Diese Stadt Libanon its im Jahr 1756 von Georg Steitz, ausleht worden, und liegt an dem Fluss Quitapahilla (ein Indianischer Name, der auf Deutsch Schlangenschloch heist)."

The immediate vicinity was settled long before the laying out of the town in 1750, as before that time the Moravians and Mennonites each had a meeting-house. This settlement was in the vicinity where Hebron now stands, and many of the first settlers were Palatines. The Noacre and Spyker families were there as early as 1723. Among the names of those in 1730, Peter Kucher, Balthaser Orth, Heinrich Zander, Michael Kapp, George Loesch, Adam Kettering, and others—names still common in the county, and whose descendants are among the most numerous families in the county. The Indians did not actually penetrate to Lebanon during the perilous years between 1750 and 1760, for that town was a place of refuge for those driven from their frontier homes by the savages. As many as sixty families took refuge at one time in the house of John Light, and several other dwellings were used as places of security. The late Col. Adam Ritscher's father was one of the first settlers, and paid ground-rent, as appears by receipts extant as early as 1751. He cleared the lot west of the one upon which his son Adam afterwards lived, from the forest then standing. There were no murders in the immediate neighborhood of Lebanon, for whose protection the frontier settlements acted as a barrier against Indian incursions.

In 1772 the town had over two hundred houses. In the Revolutionary war many of its citizens served in the Continental army, and as late as 1840 war pensioners of that struggle lived in the borough. A large number of Hessian prisoners were confined here in the Lutheran Church and the Moravian Church at Hebron. The "American House" was built in 1771, and the original inscription over the door reads, "God bless this house and all that go in and out of it,—Caspar and Sarvina Schnaberly, 1771." The house of the late Dr. George Ross on Cumberland Street was the first three-story house erected in town.

During the war of the Revolution Lebanon was an important place. It was the depot of supplies of provisions, and the store-house for ammunition during the occupancy of Philadelphia by the British. A large number of gunsmiths were collected here at work for the Continental army. Shoes especially were manufactured, and large quantities of leather tanned. The people were exceedingly patriotic, and there was always a recruiting-officer stationed at Lebanon to enlist soldiers to fill up the depleted companies in the service.

It must not be inferred, however, that all was peace and loyalty to the American cause at Lebanon. It is true the war gave employment to many mechanics for the making of muskets and accoutrements, but now and then there were persons who, although not at heart disaffected, caused considerable trouble. As in the recent civil war, enthusiasm carried to extremes impugned the motives of many who were just as brave, just as devoted to the cause of independence, but their zeal was not of that exuberant kind which frequently overreaches itself, and so noisy, turbulent, excitable persons misconstrued their motives, very frequently maliciously.

A suspected person was generally requested to hurrah for the Congress; if this was refused some punishment was meted out to him. We have come across the brief record of quite a number of suits growing out of this, which were tried after the war closed. None, however, were convicted, but they plagued their participants. One case in which Col. De Haas figured was where John Patton, of Lebanon, brought a charge of illegal imprisonment against the former. It seems that while Gen. De Haas was in command at Lebanon, securing help for the American army, he used Patton's dwelling for a store-house, and naturally the owner and his wife became indignant, and spoke their minds very freely. The general finally arrested Patton, and put him in irons, "to save him from the soldiers," said the former; but it is not improbable that personal motives of revenge had quite as much to do with it, for military officers as a general thing have considerable vanity, and never submit to having their authority disobeyed or their motives impugned, much less to be insulted as Gen. De Haas was. Patton called him "a —— bullock driver general," and further "—— those who made him a general." That was too much for the old patriot, and he very justly arrested the irate inhabitant of Lebanon.

Many transactions of similar character occurred; and there was, when the Revolutionary war had subsided, a return of that spirit of revenge or vindictiveness which kept the good people of Lebanon in a ferment for years, until finally not only the courts but the Legislature interfered and put a stop to these attempts to harass and annoy the patriots who had helped to achieve our independence.

The magazine referred to, which was established here, was in an old building on Tenth Street, a short distance west of Quitopahilla Creek, known as "Gibson's town, down to a few years ago. The magazine was afterwards turned into a barracks, the ammunition removed to Lancaster, taken there by twenty wagons, which made from four to six trips each, showing that the quantity was large.

Lebanon was erected into a borough by an act of the Legislature passed March 28, 1799, but its people never accepted its provisions, and the act remained a dead letter until Feb. 20, 1821, when a new act was passed, repealing the first one and creating anew the borough of Lebanon with a charter of more ample powers than the one of 1799. Its boundaries were designated as follows: "Beginning at the southeast corner of the old town plot; thence by the land of Abraham Light and the several town lots north eight degrees east two hundred and twenty-five perches to a post; thence by land of John Light, south seventy-nine degrees west one hundred and sixty-six perches to a post; thence by lands of Peter Gloninger and others, south one hundred and ninety-two perches to a post; thence by lots of Jacob Goodhart and others, east one hundred and thirty perches to the place of beginning."

The year following its incorporation into a borough Lebanon contained the following inhabitants:

Poor Children.

Only thirteen poor children, and all those, but four, children of widows.

The first election was held on the first Monday in May, 1821, by Leonard Greenawalt and Philip Huber, commissioners, designated in the charter for that purpose, at which the following officers were elected: Chief Burgess, Jacob Goodhart; Assistant Burgess, Jacob Arudt; Councilmen: John Nagel, Conrad Fasnacht, Jacob Light, Adam Ritscher, Leonard Greenawalt, John Uhler; High Constable, Rudolph Kelker.

An act of Feb. 9, 1853, extended the limits of the borough so as to embrace and include the town of East Lebanon, then lately laid out on the eastern side of the borough, and to contain the following area: "Beginning at a stone, being the northeast corner of said borough, thence through the outlots in a course parallel with Cumberland Street in the said borough to the line of land of Casper Light, and said town of East Lebanon; thence along said line and the lands of the heirs of John Light, deceased, and Solomon McCaully, to the southeast corner of said town of East Lebanon; thence along the line of Dr. Schenck, John Shindel, and the said town, until it intersects the said borough."

By act of May 6, 1854, the borough was divided into two wards, east and west, Doe Alley being the dividing line.

By act of May 12, 1857, the borough limits were again extended so as to make its boundaries as follows: "Beginning at a stone, the present northeast corner of the borough; thence through land of Casper Light north eighty-five east 84 $\frac{1}{2}$ perches to middle of public road leading past steam-house; thence along the same south four west 188 perches to a stone in middle of Sheafferstown road; thence along same north eighty-two and one-half west 132 perches to the long lane; thence along the middle of said lane south one-half east 69 perches to a stone; thence through outlots south eighty-five west $312\frac{1}{2}$ perches on a stone on Kreider's land; thence through Kreider's and other lands north, two and one quarter west, $128\frac{1}{2}$ perches to Furnace road; thence along said road north seven west $163\frac{1}{2}$ perches to the Forge road; thence along the same and by the line of the borough of North Lebanon north eighty-five east 68 perches to a stone north seventy-four and three quarters east 244 perches to a stone, and north eighty-five east $102\frac{1}{2}$ perches to the place of beginning."

At the time of its incorporation its boundaries were Seventh Street on the east, Lincoln Alley on the south, Twelfth Street on the west, and Church Street on the north.

In 1821 it contained three hundred dwellings, ten taverns, a like number of stores, one grist-mill, one clover-mill, a foundry, and many mechanic shops. The original market-house stood on the south side of Ninth Street, in which the olden fairs were held over a century ago. The present one was built by Reinohl & Bechtel, in 1833, for eight hundred and fifty dollars.

In 1817 the Harrisburg and Reading Turnpike was built, which runs through the centre of the borough, and in 1827 the Union Canal, which passes just north of it. The construction of the latter gave an impetus to its growth and insured its prosperity. In 1858 the Lebanon Valley Railroad was built, which runs through the borough. Its business at first was small, and only required one train a day, but increased rapidly in both freight and passengers.

By the act of April 4, 1868, the borough of North Lebanon was annexed.

The officers of the borough from its incorporation to the present time have been:

North Lebanon was incorporated into a borough in 1855, and then included the land lying between the old borough and Union Canal, together with a considerable tract contiguous to this and just north of the canal. Four years afterwards it was reduced in size by making the canal its northern limit, the upper part reverting back to North Lebanon township. The two boroughs grew side by side in rivalry, but the construction of the Lebanon Valley Railroad, which passed through the old borough, and was completed in 1858, soon sent it far ahead in progress. Manufacturing establishments were put up, and new dwellings extended the town on every side. In 1868 the two boroughs were consolidated. The act of consolidation created six wards, the east ward of the old borough being divided into the First and Fourth, the west ward into the Second and Third, while North Lebanon borough was separated into the Fifth and Sixth. The First Ward includes all lying south and east of Walnut Alley and Doe Alley; the Second, all lying south and west of Cumberland Street and Doe Alley; the Third, all lying west of Doe Alley, between Cumberland Street and railroad; the Fourth, all lying east of Doe Alley, between Walnut Alley and railroad; the Fifth, all lying east of North Ninth Street, between railroad and the canal; and the Sixth, all lying west of North Ninth Street, between railroad and the canal.

From its incorporation as a borough, in 1855, up to the period of its consolidation with Lebanon, in 1868, the following were the officers of North Lebanon:

Chief Burgesses.

- 1855. George Hoffman.
- 1856. C. H. Borgner.
- 1857. Levi Schools.
- 1858. Franklin Walter.
- 1859. Adolphus Reinoehl.
- 1860. Cyrus Mutch.
- 1861. William Eekenroth.
- 1866. John H. Miller.
- 1867. Adolphus Reinoehl.

Town Clerks.

- 1855. Charles H. Meily.
- 1856. A. D. Dutter.
- 1857. C. H. Meily.
- 1858. Gideon Light.
- 1859. J. K. Funk.
- 1860. Charles Forster.
- 1861. John Rodearmel.
A. S. Light.
- 1867. Brooke B. Forster.

In 1857 the borough of Lebanon was graded, and soon after gas was introduced into the town. A board of health of one citizen from each ward was established by act of Feb. 20, 1873. By the act of March 14, 1871, it was provided that the chief burgess, who had been elected annually heretofore, should thereafter be elected for two years, and by the act of 1868, making six wards, provision was made for twelve instead of six councilmen as obtained before,—two from each ward, of whom one is elected every alternate year. The ordinance of Sept. 10, 1831 (still in force), prevented the running at large of swine in the borough, and that of March 20, 1837, prohibited the ascension of balloons with fire attached. That of June 17, 1848, prohibits the making of bonfires or discharging or firing crackers or fireworks in the streets or alleys.

Lebanon is regularly laid out. Those streets which run north and south take their names from their numerical order, beginning with First and ending with Sixteenth. Cumberland Street, running east and west through the centre of the town, intersects these at right angles, dividing them into North and South First, North and South Second, etc. South of Cumberland and parallel with it are Chestnut, Walnut, Elizabeth, Oak, Elm, and Locust Streets; north of Cumberland are Willow, Scull, Church, Lehman, Mifflin, and Guilford. According to this plan are the buildings numbered. The population has been as follows:

and in 1883 is over ten thousand.

POSTMASTERS.—When Lebanon was made the county-seat, on the organization of Lebanon County in 1813, Jacob Karch was postmaster. He or some members of his family held the office until Joseph Gleim was appointed. The latter was succeeded by Lucy Ruthrauff, whose successor was Mrs. Thomas Bibighaus, who held until 1861.

Under President Lincoln's administration John E. George was appointed, and held it until succeeded by John George. The latter dying in 1876, the present incumbent, C. W. Carmany, was then appointed. The office has been for many years on the corner of Eighth and Cumberland Streets.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS AT LEBANON.—In the year 1792, President George Washington, David Rittenhouse, the eminent scientist, Dr. William Smith, and Robert Morris, the great financier of the Revolution, passed through Lebanon during the survey being made for the Union Canal. Their journey was made in the interests of the great internal improvements then being started, of which this canal was one.

During President Jackson's administration, David Crockett, then the eccentric Tennessee Congressman, delivered a lecture in Lebanon.

In 1859, Hon. William H. Seward, United States senator of New York, accompanied by Lord Napier, the British minister, and Count Sartiges, the French minister, passed a night in Lebanon, the guests of the Coleman family, whose vast iron furnaces and Cornwall ore-hills they minutely inspected.

Of recent years the fame of the Cornwall ore-banks and the iron-furnaces there have been the cause of numerous visits from distinguished men of both continents, and what was formerly considered a red-letter day in the history of Lebanon now is barely noted.

SALEM EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.

About the years 1733-35 the first efforts were made to gather together the scattered Germans who had settled around where the town of Lebanon now stands into a congregation. The Rev. John Casper Stoeber, a young man of commendable zeal, who had a few years previous begun his labors in the neighborhood of what is now New Holland, Lancaster Co., labored with great energy in organizing numerous congregations north of the South Mountain. Besides the "Hill Church," in North Annville township, where his remains lie buried, was this congregation, now known as Salem Evangelical Lutheran Church. The town of Lebanon not yet being laid out, the congregation worshipped about two and a half miles southeast of Lebanon, where a house of worship was afterwards built and owned jointly by the Lutherans and Reformed, called "Die Kruppe Kirche." This edifice was occupied by the congregation until about 1768, when it was said to be in a dilapidated condition. There is a chalice and flagon for the administration of the sacrament of the altar yet in existence, the chalice being inscribed "A. W., 1757," and the flagon "J. E., 1760."

Some of the baptisms recorded in the early history of the Lutheran Church at Lebanon are:

- Elizabeth, daughter of Michael and Elizabeth Bechtel, born Nov. 7, 1733, baptized April 28, 1734. Sponsors, John Martin and Sabina Meily.
 Anna Sabina, daughter of Martin and Sabina Meily, born Sept. 2, 1733, baptized Sept. 17, 1733. Sponsors, John and Regina Bindoagle.
 John Martin, son of Ottmer Snavely, born Dec. 9, 1733, baptized April 28, 1734. Sponsors, John Martin Kirstetter and wife.
 John Jacob, son of John Jacob and Margareta Beyer, born April 8, 1734, baptized April 21, 1734.
 Elizabeth, daughter of John Adam Heylman, born May 12, 1734, baptized July 21, 1734.
 John, son of John George and Anna Klein, born Dec. 4, 1735; baptized April 18, 1736.
 John Martin, son of John Martin Meily, born Sept. 7, 1736, baptized Oct. 3, 1736.

The earliest marriages in the Lutheran Church in connection with the Lebanon charge were:

- Feb. 25, 1731. By Rev. John Caspar Stoever. Francis Reynolds to Catharine Steitz.
 Dec. 18, 1734. Christopher Meyer to Anna Susanna Koppenheffer.
 Oct. 6, 1755. John Peter Kueher to Anna Barbara Koppenheffer.
 May 3, 1737. Anastatin Uhler to Dorothea Jerg.
 Feb. 6, 1738. John Welsh to Elizabeth Whiteside.
 Dec. 12, 1738. George Reynolds to Eleanor Steitz.
 Jan. 29, 1739. Peter Heylman to Salome Frey.

On the 13th of March, 1765, a lot of ground for church purposes was deeded by the Rev. "John Casper Stoever, clerk, and Mary Catharine, his wife, Christopher Weyman and Eva Maria, his wife, Philip Greenawalt and Margareta, his wife, Casper Snebele and Sabina, his wife, Christian Gish and Sophia, his wife, George Hock and Sophia, his wife, and Ulrich Snebele and Eva, his wife, to Jacob Bickel, Daniel Stroh, Philip Fernsler, and Michael Reiter" for the use of the Lutheran Congregation, "the yearly rent of one red rose in June in every year forever hereafter if the same shall be lawfully demanded" . . . by the grantors, their heirs, and assigns at the said town of Lebanon. A school-house was built the same year, which was also used for church purposes. Three years after, the following petition, signed by the minister and the trustees, to which is appended the certificate of the justices of the peace for Lebanon township and the borough of Lancaster, show the efforts made towards the building of a house of worship:

"To all respectively well disposed protestant Lovers of Divine Worship and Christian Religion, Greeting!

"WHEREAS, a small Number of profess'd Members to the protestant Lutheran Religion have settled themselves in a Town lately laid out called Lebanon in the County of Lancaster and Province of Pennsylvania, and for want of a more proper Room have hitherto held their Divine and Religious Service with Great Inconvenience in private Houses, which and other Inconveniences arising from ye Increase of People, to prevent for the future.

"We have concluded under God's Protection to erect and build a decent House set apart for religious Worship, but at the same Time must acknowledge, that as almost all new Beginners besides having lately bought a Schoolhouse for y^e better Education and Information of our Youth we are not able ourselves to finish the same properly without help and the Assistance of other charitable Christians. We humbly beseech & desire therefore all good Christians would contribute somewhat to this our religious Building with a willing & cheerful Heart, according to their abilities & Blessings received from above. For the Receiving of which charitable Gifts we have Impowred y^e Bearers hereof our trusty and well beloved Brethren Fred^r Yensel & Christian Fremdling, wishing & pray^s from y^e Bottom of our Hearts, that the Giver of all good & perfect Gifts would be pleased to reward all such liberal Benefactors for their mild Contributions with innumerable Blessings in Body and Soul henceforth and to all Eternities. Amen!

The church was probably erected the following year. It was built of logs, which, after its demolition, were used in the erection of a building which is now the "Oswego House," on Cumberland Street, owned by William G. Lausch. An interesting relic of the old log church is a solid iron rooster which graced the steeple, now in possession of G. H. Reinsoehl, of Lebanon.

The corner-stone of the present edifice was laid June 8, 1796. In it was deposited a brass plate with the inscription: "This corner-stone was most solemnly laid this 8th day of June, A.D. 1796, by the reverend gentlemen, Emanuel Shulze, William Kurtz, and George Lochman, and on it there shall be by the grace of God, erected a German Evangelical Lutheran Church, called Salem Church." The following were the members of the vestry or church council at that time: Trustees, Michael Reider, Philip Fernsler, Jacob Stieb, Samuel Meily; Elders, Conrad Reinsoehl, John Shuee; Deacons, Peter Shindel, Frederick Embich, George Shott; Treasurer, Christopher Uhler.

The building committee were Christopher Uhler, Philip Fernsler, Conrad Hoffman, and Peter Miller. The church was dedicated and consecrated June 3, 1798. The first regularly commenced and well preserved register in possession of the congregation was begun by Rev. Frederick Aug. Cons. Muhlenberg, bearing date May 1, 1773.

The regular pastors who have served the congregation since its location in the town of Lebanon have been:

Aug. 1, 1794-1815. Rev. George Lochman preached his introductory sermon August 3d.

1815-36. Rev. William G. Ernst, D.D., who commenced Nov. 13, 1815. Preached his first sermon November 12th.

1836-44. Rev. Jonathan Ruthrauff. During this pastorate difficulties arose in the congregation, owing to the pastor's departing from the ancient customs of the church, and his entertaining views on conversion foreign to the doctrines of the gospel as understood by the Lutheran faith, in consequence of which he attempted to introduce new measures. These difficulties culminated in the organization of Zion's Lutheran Church by the Ruthrauff party.

1844-49. Rev. William G. Ernst, D.D. In 1848 under Dr. Ernst's auspices, the church was remodeled, and a basement for Sunday-school and lecture purposes put in, and a vestibule was also added. The same year the congregation was chartered. Dr. Ernst continued pastor until his death in 1849.

Nov. 25, 1849-53. Rev. G. F. Krotel, D.D., who in May, 1853, removed to Lancaster City to become pastor of Trinity Church.

July 25, 1853, to 1854. Rev. John N. Hoffman, preaching his introductory sermon July 31, 1853.

1854-64. Rev. H. S. Miller.

1864, June-November, 1876. Rev. B. W. Schmauck. During his pastorate the elegant new parsonage was built, one of the finest and most commodious in the county. In 1866 the church was again remodeled, the galleries being lowered, etc., and the pulpit recess embellished with a beautiful painting of the resurrection. Mr. Schmauck accepted a call to Allentown, the present scene of his labors.

Jan. 25, 1877, Rev. George H. Trabert took charge of the congregation and was installed the following Sunday, Revs. B. W. Schmauck, of Allentown, and J. W. Hassler, of New Holland, officiating. In 1879 the Young People's Society, which had been organized two years previous, presented to the congregation a handsome communion service, bearing the inscription: "Presented to Salem Evangelical Lutheran Congregation by the Young People's Society, June, 1879." The Sunday-school, in December, 1881, numbered, including officers and teachers, about seven hundred, and is divided into three departments,—senior, intermediate, and infant. Rev.

Trabert resigned March 1, 1883, and the Rev. B. W. Schmauck and his son Rev. Theodore E. Schmauck were called to the pastorate, and installed on July 1, 1883.

The first parsonage was secured in 1800. A number of interesting relics of "ye olden time" are in the possession of the congregation. One is a covering of the finest linen for the communion vessels at the celebration of the Lord's Supper, which has been in use since 1773, which date it bears, worked in one corner. It is ornamented with miniature crowns and stars worked in yellow silk floss, and is in an excellent state of preservation, being still used at every communion. A communion service of antique pattern, comprising two flagons, two plates, and a chalice, which are still sometimes used on special occasions, is also sacredly preserved. It bears the inscription:

"HENRICH
ANDONIUS
1769."

FOR THE LUTHERAN CONGREGATION IN LEBANON TOWN
LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE PROVINCE OF PENNSYLVANIA.
PACK & CHAPMAN OF LONDON, FECIT 1770.

There are two cemeteries connected with the Salem Lutheran Church. The one is on the church lot proper, and was set apart for burial purposes about 1765. Many of the oldest tombstone inscriptions are illegible. Some are herewith given:

ZION'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.

This church was organized in December, 1842, by members of the Salem Lutheran Church. Services were held at various places until the first church was built, in 1843 and 1844, on the corner of Ninth Street and Spring Alley. The first officers were: Deacons, Orth Light, Henry Rohland, John Fees, John Schnably, Michael Lauser, Henry B. Oves; Elders, John Artz, George Faber, Jacob Moore, George Derr, William Ritscher; Building Committee, Jacob B. Weidman (President), George W. Kline (Secretary), Peter Shott, John George, Jacob Roedel, Jacob Stoever, Leonard Zimmerman, Joseph Zimmerman, Henry Derr, John Weidman. The pastors have been:

1842. Rev. Jonathan Ruthrauff (until then pastor of Salem Lutheran Church, from Dec. 25, 1836).
 1850. Rev. Augustus H. Wedekind, D.D.
 1863. Rev. L. A. Gotwald, D.D.
 1865. Rev. Daniel Schindler.
 1867. Rev. M. Rhodes, D.D.
 1872. Rev. J. F. Reinmund, D.D., who died April 26, 1880.

1880. Rev. William H. Dunbar, the present incumbent. He was born in Northampton County, graduated at Gettysburg College and Theological Seminary, and before called here was pastor of St. Peter's Church of Easton.

The second church edifice was finished in 1875, the last service and communion being held in the first church Sept. 21, 1873, and the second one dedicated June 13, 1875. During this interregnum, services were held in the court-house. During Dr. Reinmund's pastorate the German services were abandoned, and now only in the English language are they held. The church is in connection with the General Synod. The church edifice is an imposing structure, elegantly finished on the interior, and beautifully arranged in all its parts.

THE FIRST REFORMED CHURCH.

It is connected with the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church of the United States. It has one of the oldest church edifices in Lebanon, and its worshipping congregation is probably the largest in the county. It was organized about 1750, and has been ministered to by the following pastors, Rev. Conrad Templeman and Rev. William Stoy, M.D., during the interval until 1768, when Rev. John Conrad Bucher was elected, who served from Nov. 24, 1768, to July 7, 1780, and died while solemnizing a marriage ceremony at Annville (then Millerstown). On Nov. 16, 1780, Rev. John William Runkle was chosen, and served some years, and from the time of his departure until Dec. 7, 1786, the congregation was served by missionary pastors from the Tulpehocken and other charges, when Rev. Ludwig Lupp was called, who remained until June 10, 1798. Rev. William Hiester was chosen Sept. 22, 1799, and continued until Nov. 22, 1827. On June 5, 1828, Rev. Henry Kroh took charge, and labored until Dec. 29, 1833. Rev. Henry Wagner came June 7, 1835, and remained until April 1, 1851. The present pastor, Rev. F. W. Kremer, D.D., commenced his pastorate in April, 1851. A large and flourishing Sunday-school of four hundred is maintained, and the influence and importance of this congregation is readily acknowledged in the community, and especially in the church of its denomination throughout the country.

ST. JOHN'S REFORMED CHURCH.

This church is an offshoot of the First Reformed Church. Application having been made in regular form to the Lebanon Classis, its organization was granted by a unanimous vote. It was subsequently perfected, a charter granted, and the present site purchased. The corner-stone was laid May 21, 1859. The edifice was erected and completed by Oct. 18, 1860, at which time it was solemnly dedicated to the worship of the Triune God.—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Rev. Henry Harbaugh, D.D., delivered the first sermon, and Rev. F. W. Kremer, D.D., performed the act of consecration. Rev. Henry Harbaugh, D.D., was installed pastor Oct. 18, 1860. He resigned Jan. 1, 1864, to accept the position of Professor of Theology in the Seminary at Mercersburg. He died Dec. 28, 1868. Rev. T. S. Johnston, D.D., was duly elected and installed pastor by the Lebanon Classis March 10, 1864, and has been its pastor to this date. The church edifice is in the Byzantine style, built of dressed sandstone, which was presented by Robert W. Coleman. It is sixty by ninety feet in size, and the audience-chamber, fifty-one by sixty-seven and a half. The interior is chastely finished and furnished. The whole is surrounded by a graceful spire, one hundred and eighty feet in height, which is crowned with a large Roman cross. The congregation has steadily increased from its organization in numbers, benevolence, and piety.

The first cemetery laid out by the Reformed Church was in 1750, and is in the rear of the church edifice on Tenth Street. Among those interred therein are the following:

ST. MARY'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

This Catholic Mission in Lebanon County is one of the oldest in Pennsylvania, being formed early in the eighteenth century by a few German families. Ground was donated by Mr. Arendorf, or Orndorf, for a cemetery and church. A small block-house was built, which was called a church, and adjoining a small piece of ground was used as the cemetery. The first priest who attended to the spiritual wants of the little flock was the Very Rev. Louis De Barth, who was in after-years appointed administrator of the Diocese of Philadelphia. His visits were few, owing to the difficulties and hardships when traveling in those days, although we are told that every three months some clergyman passing through would stop and administer the sacraments. Father Fitzsimmons frequently visited these parts after Father De Barth had been appointed administrator. The little congregation soon increased; Catholics came from Colebrook and vicinity, prominent among whom were the Friels. In those days great sacrifices were made by our pious ancestors, who walked from thirty to forty miles, starting on Saturday night, in order to receive the consolations of religion. A few Irish families began to settle in the vicinity of Colebrook and Cornwall. Prominent at the latter place was the Ferry family. The old block church soon became unfit for religious purposes, and the small band of Catholics, although widely scattered, were invited to attend service at the house of Jacob Arnold. Services were held at the latter place until the year 1812, Rev. John Beshter attending to their spiritual wants. The first baptism on record is as late a date as 1795. At that time the congregation, although small, was composed mostly of thrifty farmers, who at this date form the greater portion of the congregation in the third and fourth generations. A movement favorable for the building of a church as near as possible in the centre of a very large circuit in which Catholics were scattered was noticed among the older members, and successfully carried on by Father Beshter. Ground was donated, and Father Beshter undertook the arduous task of erecting a church for his little flock. He did not remain to see it finished, but was transferred to Adams Co., Pa. He died on the 4th of January, 1842, in the seventy-sixth year of his age, at his residence in Abbottstown, Adams Co., Pa.

The corner-stone of the old church was laid in May of the year 1812. Work was at once continued and steadily went on until the spring of the year 1814, when the little church, which had been consecrated to the virgin mother of the Saviour, was solemnly dedicated to the service of God by an English priest hailing from Lancaster, whose name we cannot learn. The building committee, the four chief pillars of the little flock, was composed of Hermanus Arnold, George Zweir, Jacob Aurentz, and Conrad Allwein. Before the dedication the balance of the debt on the church was removed by these four men, each giving two hundred and fifty dollars (the entire debt being four hundred pounds). Peter Ruhl was the carpenter, William Kean the brickmason, the few farmers and others assisting by hauling all the stone, sand, and other materials. The clergymen who occasionally attended to the wants of the new parish were the Revs. George Shenfelder, James Cummiskey, and G. D. Hogan. These clergymen visited Lebanon about once a month.

The little congregation steadily increased as the town advanced in size and enterprise; more hands were needed, hard, thorny hands, hands that knew how to work. The Union Canal was to pass through the town, turnpikes were to be made or kept in repair, and many other improvements which required the aid of the hardy sons of toil. Many Irish and real German families found their way to Lebanon. Father Charles Kearns was appointed to reside here and attend to the wants of the fast increasing flock. His death occurred in September, 1825. The pastors who officiated in Lebanon after his death, until the enlargement of the little church, were Revs. N. Corvin, Michael Curran, P. Duffy, V. M. Neuberger, the Steinbacher Brothers, F. X. Marshall, then the advent of Rev. Baumgardner, who made a movement to enlarge the church, the demands of the congregation calling for it. This was accomplished in 1843, and in the latter part of that year Father Baumgardner was transferred to another mission, and Rev. John Levig, O. S. F., became pastor in April, 1849. In the month of September, 1850, Rev. Anthony Schwartz, now in charge of a congregation in Minersville, Pa., became pastor. It was under his direction that the new cemetery was purchased for five hundred and five dollars, and was consecrated in December, 1856. Father Schwartze being transferred to his present pastorate, Rev. Daniel Oberholzer, missionary, was made pastor. In June, 1858, he was again transferred to Philadelphia, and to Rev. Antoninus Grundner, O. S. B. V. M., was given the pastorate. The latter was the originator of the present parochial schools. He was sent as pastor to St. Alphonsus' Church, Philadelphia, in December of the year 1861, and labored well and faithfully there until his death, which occurred in August, 1876. Rev. Emil Stenzel next took charge of St. Mary's parish until his transfer, which occurred in the summer of 1865. In November, Rev. John Boetzkes received the appointment as pastor. Under his direction the academy occupied by the Sisters was erected, and the congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary took possession of the new residence. After the division of the Philadelphia diocese they returned to their mother home in Reading. Rev. Father Boetzkes was transferred to another mission in August, 1869. The church was for a short time interdicted by the bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. J. F. Shanahan, on account of trustee difficulties, but was again reopened for divine services by Rev. A. F. Kuhlman on the 8th of September, 1869.

Following the advent of Father Kuhlman, there was a steady increase of the congregation, when he began to take measures looking to the erection of a new and more commodious house of worship. The corner-stone of this magnificent church edifice was laid Aug. 15, 1876, and its consecration took place Dec. 14, 1880, the Rt. Rev. J. F. Shanahan, Bishop of Harrisburg, officiating. Its dimensions are sixty-nine by one hundred and thirty-nine feet. The front is composed of Shaefferstown sandstone, of a reddish hue, with Ohio stone trimmings, and its side walls are brick. The height of the two towers is one hundred and thirty feet. The interior is handsomely decorated. The roof is supported by Gothic pillars. The fresco work was done by George Seiling, of Reading, the rich ultramarine blue of which, studded with golden stars, attracts the eye at once. The two very large windows in the transepts, one representing the Nativity, and the other the Ascension of our Lord, or the beginning and ending of the Saviour's career, are the gifts of M. Friel. The windows filling the north side are the gifts of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Beneficial Society; of the parents of the late Father A. F. Kuhlman; of the Sodality; of the late Herman Arnold; and a memorial of the late Phillip Allwein. The windows on the south are the gifts of the Arch Confraternity; of Joseph and Mary Bowman; of the Sunday-school children; and a memorial of the late Joseph Arnold. The bell was a gift from M. Friel, the ostensorium from Mrs. Elizabeth Arnold, and the sanctuary bell and cruetts from Mrs. Leah Arnold. Fourteen stations of the cross, Munich composition, were presented by members of the congregation. The three magnificent altars cost seven thousand dollars. The main altar is a beautiful specimen of Grecian art, rising to a height of forty-five feet from the floor of the sanctuary to the cross surmounting the whole. The highest niche contains a figure of the sacred heart of Jesus, with a cherubim on either side immediately below. On either corner, standing under beautiful canopies, are figures of the Apostles of Germany and Ireland, Saints Boniface and Patrick. On either side of the tabernacle, in niches, stand the twelve apostles as a body-guard to the Holy of Holies. Under the altar-table is a representation of the Lamb of God. Resting on either side are the figures of the fathers of the church,—Ambrose, Augustine, Gregory, and Jerome. The altar was built by Anton Kloster, of New York. The edifice, of modern Gothic architecture, was successfully brought to completion by its able builder and contractor, Esaias Gingrich. Father A. F. Kuhlman, who had zealously labored for years with this congregation, and under whose trained eye this massive structure and splendid work of art had been commenced and finished, died Nov. 23, 1881, leaving the heritage of a good work well done, and respected and loved by all for his piety and learning. He was succeeded by Father Adam Christ, the present pastor.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, LEBANON.

According to the best data now available, it appears that the traveling preachers of the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church preached in the borough of Lebanon in school-houses, in private dwellings, and elsewhere early in the present century, but by whom Methodism was first introduced into the town is not now certainly known. In the year 1819, Rev. Henry G. King, of the Philadelphia Conference, preached occasionally in a school-house, then located on the west side of Eighth Street north of Willow Street. No society, however, was formed until about the year 1827, when a small class was organized, with Edwin A. Atlee appointed as leader, who shortly after removed from Lebanon, and was succeeded by John Atkins, who continued as leader of the class till 1831, when he also removed, and the class was discontinued for the space of a year or more, as was also preaching by the circuit preachers. In 1832, George Gleim returned to Lebanon, his native place, from which he had been absent for several years, who at once opened his house for preaching, invited the circuit ministers to come and preach. A small class was soon formed, the first meeting of which was held June 30, 1833. The members present were George Gleim (leader), Virginia Gleim (his wife), Jonathan Tompkins, Anna Tompkins, and Susan Johnson. Lebanon now became one of the regular appointments of the circuit, although there was no church edifice, the house of Mr. Gleim, school-houses, and occasionally the court-house, being used instead. Among the eminent men who preached in the last-named place nearly fifty years ago was Rev. E. S. Janes, at that time agent for Dickinson College, at Carlisle, and who, in 1844, was elected to the episcopacy, in which position he served with great ability till 1876, when he died. At a Quarterly Conference held at "Dauphintown," June 15, 1839, a committee consisting of Samuel Shay, George Gleim, and John Shay was appointed to estimate the probable cost of building a meeting-house in the borough of Lebanon. Immediately thereafter subscriptions were solicited and obtained, and a board of trustees, consisting of John Shay, James Kennedy, Samuel Shay, George Gleim, and Thomas Shay, was appointed by Rev. William McCombs, the preacher in charge. A building lot (forty-nine and a half by sixty-six feet, located on the east side of Tenth Street south of Cumberland Street) was purchased of Henry Dehuff, for the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars, and on the 12th day of October of the same year the corner-stone of the church was laid with appropriate ceremony, but the church was not finished till the following season.

On the 2d day of August, 1840, the church was formally dedicated to the worship of God, Rev. Solomon Higgins (P. E.) preaching the dedicatory sermon. One year from the day of dedication the church was duly incorporated under the title of "The Methodist Episcopal Church of the Borough of Lebanon." The entire cost of this modest house of worship, including the lot, was $1762.51.

In 1842 the class (which a decade before numbered but five persons) numbered thirty-two, with Mr. Gleim still as leader. The following is a list of the names of the preachers who served the society during the first decade of its history, namely,—Revs. Manning Force (P. E.), David Best, Jonas Busy, R. W. Thomas, Charles Shoch, Allen John, Solomon Higgins (P. E.), Lawrence McCombs (P. E.), John Hunter, Thomas Sovereign, David Shields, Francis Hodgson, William McCombs, John Potts (P. E.), Valentine Gray, Robert E. Kemp, H. E. Gilroy, John Edwards, William Cooper, C. W. Jackson, John W. Arthur, James Smith (P. E.).

At the close of the second period of ten years the society had increased to about sixty members, and class number two had been formed, with Samuel Behm, M.D., as leader. During this period, under the pastorate of Rev. T. S. Johnson (who is now pastor of St. John's Reformed Church of Lebanon), the church building was enlarged and otherwise improved at a cost of $1200. The names of the pastors of this period, namely, from 1842 to 1852, are as follows: Revs. William Cooper, T. S. Johnson, John W. Arthur, George Quigley, R. M. Greenbank, John Walsh, Joseph H. Wythes, T. A. Fernley, Elijah Miller (P. E.), James H. McFarland, James Hand, John Ruth, James Slater. Before the close of the third decade the society numbered more than a hundred members. The Sabbath-school which was organized during the time of the building of the church, had grown and flourished until it equaled numerically the membership of the church, a parsonage had been secured, and, in short, so marked had been the prosperity of the society that the subject of becoming an independent charge began to be discussed and advocated until, in the year 1859, the church was separated from the circuit of which it had so long formed a part, and was constituted an independent charge under the pastoral care of Rev. Samuel Irwin. The preachers of the period just referred to were the following: Rev. J. D. Curtis (P. E.), Joseph Dare, G. Oram, James Cunningham (P. E.), H. B. Mauger, J. S. Cook, S. W. Kurtz, J. Y. Ashton, T. J. Thompson (P. E.). The first year of its existence as a separate charge the society experienced unusual prosperity. The following were the pastors from that period to the present time: 1859-60, S. Irwin, T. J. Thompson (P. E.); 1861, J. McCarter, who shortly after his appointment to the charge entered the army, and was succeeded by J. L. Hysinger; 1862-63, J. B. Dennison, W. L. Gray (P. E.); 1864, C. I. Thompson; 1865, M. H. Sisty; 1866-67, J. Y. Ashton, J. Castle (P. E.); 1868, William Major; 1869, H. E. Gilroy, R. H. Pattison (P. E.); 1870-71, William H. Elliott; 1872, E. F. Pitcher, C. F. Turner (P. E.); 1873-75, Theodore Stevens; 1876-77, G. W. F. Graff, G. Cummins (P. E.); 1878, T. M. Griffith; 1879-81, J. J. Timanus, J. Dickerson (P. E.); 1882-83, William H. Elliott.

In the summer of 1863 the subject of a new church was agitated; a building lot was secured, and in October, 1866, the corner-stone was laid. During the following year the edifice on the northeast corner of Eighth and Willow Streets was finished and dedicated. The cost, including the lot, was twenty-four thousand dollars. The present membership numbers two hundred and fifty.

EMANUEL EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

This church was built in 1830, destroyed by fire in 1851, in which year it was replaced by the present two-story brick edifice on the same lot on Chestnut Street on which the first stood. For the past sixteen years the pastors have been,—

- 1866. F. Hoffman.
- 1868. S. P. Brown.
- 1870. J. C. Bleim.
- 1871. C. J. Tehr.
- 1874. Joseph Specht.
- 1877. C. J. Hornberger.
- 1879. J. D. Knorr.

The parsonage adjoins the church. The church membership is two hundred and thirty-five. Its Sunday-school is the oldest of this denomination in the United States, having been organized in December, 1832.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION—ENGLISH MISSION.

At the East Pennsylvania Conference, held at Tamaqua, in February, 1873, it was resolved to locate an English mission in Lebanon, and at the Conference held at Allentown the following year Rev. J. G. Sands was appointed as missionary for Lebanon. On April 16, 1870, some thirty members of Emanuel Association met to organize the mission. A committee was appointed to procure a temporary place of worship and a lot on which to build, who rented Ramsey's Hall, on South Eighth Street, where the first preaching was held April 26, 1874. The mission was organized with some fifty members from Emanuel Church, with two or three others.

The corner-stone of the church was laid the 29th of September, 1877, and the church, edifice dedicated on the 23d of December following, having been erected in four months. It is a frame structure, sixty-five by forty feet, nineteen feet in height, with classroom on each side, and the audience-room has three aisles and two tiers of seats. Its pastors have been,—1874, J. G. Sands; 1877, A. M. Stirk; 1878, J. H. Shirey, present incumbent. He was licensed to preach in Berks County in 1876, and before he came here had preached at Uniontown, in Northumberland Co., and in Plymouth, Montgomery Co., Pa.

ST. LUKE'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This parish was organized in 1855, and its chapel built in 1863. The church edifice, the finest in the county, and not surpassed in the State, was erected in 1879 and 1880, and consecrated on St. Luke's day in the latter year. Its rectors have been Rev. A. M. Abel to January, 1878, and since then Rev. Chandler Hare, A.M. He was born in Philadelphia, educated in the University of Pennsylvania, where he received the degree of Master of Arts; was rector of the church at Carthage Landing, N. Y., in 1861; from 1862 to 1871 of St. James, Pittston, Pa.; of Calvary, at Tamaqua, Pa., from 1871 to 1878; and was called here in 1880. He is a son of Rev. George Emlin Hare, D.D., of Philadelphia, and a brother of Rev. William Hobart Hare, bishop of Niobrara, Dacotah. The Sunday-school has one hundred and ten scholars. The parish has four parochial day-schools, in which one hundred and fifty children receive instruction. Mr. Hare, the rector, is also warden of the Church Home at Jonestown.

The church edifice is a stone structure, of Gothic architecture, and is built of limestone, the vertical lines being of brown stone from the Cornwall Quarries, and the horizontal lines of Ohio stone from the Berea Quarries. The widow-frames, internal and external, are also of stone. It consists of a nave and two transepts, with a very deep chancel and two chancel transepts, with library and clergy vestry attached to main building. Immediately back of the chancel is a stone cloister library with vestry. The floors are laid in Spanish tiles from Valencia, and those in the library and vestry are laid in English and pictorial tiles. The edifice has a false clerestory supported by two rows of columns of Nova Scotia granite. The capitals of these columns are of Ohio stone elabo-ately carved with lilies, roses, etc. There are over five thousand dollars' worth of carving on the inside and outside of the church. There is no plastering or painting in the church, it being all stone, brick, and wood, carved and stained. It is heated by steam throughout. Its entire length is one hundred feet, and its broadest part seventy-five. The tower is one hundred and three feet high, and attached to it is a turret running up its whole height. There are two turrets on each side of the main entrance sixty-five feet in height. The seating capacity is for four hundred and fifty persons. The ceiling is of oak beautifully carved and stained. The communicants number eighty-five. The church, chapel, and parsonage are located on the corner of Chestnut and Sixth Streets.

SALEM UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.

This church congregation was organized about 1820, when the first edifice was built. The second and present one was erected in 1845, on the corner of Ninth and Church Streets. It is a stone structure, two stories high, and has a parsonage adjoining. The first edifice was on Seventh Street, and was built of brick. Since 1859 the pastors have been:

- 1859. Rev. Steigerwalt.
- 1862. Joseph Daugherty.
- 1865. Jacob Mark.
- 1868. H. H. Gelbach.
- 1871. J. Runk.
- 1873. J. Shropp.
- 1876. E. Light.
- 1878. J. P. Smith, present incumbent.

Before 1859, among the pastors were Revs. Schropp, Sands, Kreider, George W. and David Hoffman. The parsonage was built in 1873. The trustees are Gideon Light, A. Miller, and D. Herr. A neat frame chapel is now in course of erection in the rear of the church for Sunday-school purposes. It is connected with the East German Conference.

TRINITY UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.

This congregation was formed in 1866 out of Salem Church. The brick edifice, corner of Ninth and Willow Streets, was erected in 1867. Its steeple is one hundred and eighty feet high. A neat parsonage adjoins the church. Its pastors have been:

- 1866. G. W. M. Rigor.
- 1870. Rev. Keys.
- 1870. Rev. D. Eberly.
- 1876. J. L. Peters.
- 1877. Rev. Schaeffer.
- 1881. M. P. Doyle, the present incumbent.

The Sunday-school numbers two hundred scholars. The board of trustees are George A. Mark, John B. Rauch, A. S. Light, John Hunsicker, and J. M. Gettle. The church edifice, lot, and parsonage cost about twenty thousand dollars.

GERMAN ZION'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.

This church edifice is on the corner of Seventh and Weidman Streets. It has English services Sunday evenings, Sunday-school at 1.30 p.m., prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening, and teachers' meeting on Friday evenings. Rev. J. M. Deitzler, now of Annaville, has been its pastor for many years.

THE MORAVIAN CHURCH.

For the early history of the Moravian Church in Lebanon our readers are referred to the sketch of old Hebron Church, under the head of South Lebanon township. What follows is simply a continuation of that history: The successive pastors of the Moravian Church in this vicinity were John H. Herzur, Adolph Meyer, Anton Wagner, Henry Beck, Godfried Engle, George Meiser, Melchior Schmidt, John Jorde, Johann Richard Utley, John Philip Menser, Franz Boehler, Andrew Langardt, John Michael Zahm, Rev. Hepner, Christian Bader, John N. Michler, Lorentz Bage, Gottlieb Senseman, John Rothe, Philip Jacob Rizenbach, Christopher Peter, John Molther, John Frederick Fritz, who went to Bethlehem in 1801; 1801, Nathaniel Braun; 1803, Charles Gottlieb Blech; 1804, Lewis Hulberner; 1813, Theodore Shulz; 1816, Abraham Reinke; 1819, Charles Gottlieb Blech; 1827, G. F. Troeger; 1836, Lewis F. Lambert; 1837, Henry Simon. In 1844 there was no resident minister, but from 1845 the church was served occasionally in preaching and the administration of sacraments by Rev. Peter Wolle, during which period many Moravian families came to this neighborhood, and the necessity was felt of removing the place of worship to Lebanon borough, a distance of one mile and a quarter from the one at Hebron. A request was sent to the Synod at Bethlehem in 1847 that it might again send a resident preacher here, and Rev. William Leonard was appointed to preach at Hebron, Heidelberg, and at Witmer's school-house, on the Horse-Shoe turnpike. On Dec. 19, 1847, the congregation was reorganized, and on June 4, 1848, the corner-stone of a new church edifice laid on the corner of Mulberry Street and Spring Alley, Revs. Samuel Reinke and Julius Beckler officiating. On Dec. 16 and 17, 1848, it was consecrated. At the close of this year the congregation had thirty communicant members. The succeeding pastors were: 1849, Christian Lichtenhaeler; 1851, Edmund de Schweinitz; 1853, Theophilus Wunderling; 1860, William Leonard; 1866, Edmund Oerter; 1870, E. P. Greider; 1873, J. Max Hark; 1876, Walter Jordan; 1880, L. P. Clewell, the present incumbent. He was born in 1843 at Nazareth, in Northampton County; has been in the ministry sixteen years, of which seven (from 1873 to 1880) was at Graceham Church, Frederick County, Md., the oldest Moravian Church in that State. The parsonage was built in 1852 and 1853, and occupied June 2d of latter year.

The church was destroyed by fire on the 29th of July, 1858, and in October following the corner-stone of the second (built in borough) church edifice laid. It was consecrated June 5, 1859, by Bishops Samuel Reinke, Goepf, and Edmund de Schweinitz, and Rev. Hogen, at which time the Litz choir of Lancaster were present. On Monday following sixty-seven communicants participated in the services.

In May, 1860, a new organ was purchased. In 1866 the preaching-places at Heidelberg and Bethel were abandoned, and services thereafter held only in Lebanon and at Horse-Shoe pike. The old stone church at Hebron was abandoned in 1848, when the new one was completed in the borough of Lebanon. The former is now used as a barn. It was built over a century ago, and in its sacred walls preaching was regularly maintained for three-quarters of a century.

THE LEBANON ACADEMY,

although in operation years prior thereto, was incorporated by act of the Legislature Feb. 8, 1816, with an appropriation of two thousand dollars. Its first trustees were the Rev. William Hiester, Rev. William Hendel, Rev. William G. Ernst, Rev. Philip Gloninger, John Andrew Shulze, Peter Shindel, Samuel Light, John Harrison, Edward Godwin, Dr. George Reidenauer, Dr. Duncan King, Philip Greenawalt, Philip Wolfersberger, Jr., Peter Lineaweaver, Abraham Doebler, John Batdorf, and Jacob B. Weidman. The building was erected by contract for two thousand eight hundred and forty dollars. Rev. Mr. Todd, of Harrisburg, was the first teacher, commencing Oct. 1, 1826. The terms for the first session were: for primary scholars, two dollars per quarter, besides the cost of wood in cold weather and six cents for contingent expenses; for the classics, eight dollars per quarter. Mr. Todd was succeeded in 1828 by Joseph N. Chipman, of Vermont, and the latter by C. G. Ridgely in 1829. On his resignation, in 1830, Rev. William G. Ernst took charge, assisted by Eugene McGivney. In 1834, John C. McKinney was elected, and taught two years. The school was not flourishing, and Rev. Mr. Ernst was induced again to take charge, assisted by his son, John Ernst. The school continued in their hands until 1839. In the mean time another select school for boys had been organized in Lebanon, taught at this time by J. H. Kluge. In 1841 a union of the two schools was effected. Mr. Kluge took charge of the academy and held it until 1852, when the building was leased to the board of public schools and it became Lebanon High School,—one of the conditions being that the classics should be taught,—and Mr. Kluge was retained as principal at a salary of four hundred dollars. He was elected county superintendent in 1854, and was succeeded by J. M. Titzel. After him Dr. Robert McCormick, Samuel B. Light, and Cyrus Boyer taught successively until 1863, when the present principal, W. J. Burnside, was elected.

THE LEBANON FEMALE SEMINARY

was incorporated April 12, 1838. A select school had been kept for some years previous, but at this time an act of the Legislature appropriated to schools of a certain character three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred dollars a year, according to the number of scholars. This school fulfilled the second condition, and received four hundred dollars a year. The trustees named in the act were Rev. Henry Wagner, Rev. William G. Ernst, Rev. Jonathan Ruthrauff, Dr. George Reidenaur, and Dr. John W. Glouinger. The elected members were Jacob B. Weidman, Simeon Guilford, Daniel Stichter, and John George. The first teacher was Mrs. Ingalls, who taught successfully for a number of years, and was succeeded by Mrs. Moore. In 1852 one of the rooms in the building was granted for the use of the public schools, Mrs. Moore taking the school. A double private school was still kept up in this and an adjoining building under different teachers,—among others Misses Rachel and Julia Ross, who were succeeded by Sarah Ellis Eddy, who taught for a number of years. She resigned in 1868, and was succeeded by F. W. March, who taught until 1870, when the building was leased to the board of public schools for the Female High School, one of the conditions being that the classics should continue to be taught in the building.

THE G. DAWSON COLEMAN INSTITUTE, named after its liberal founder, the late and much-esteemed Hon. G. Dawson Coleman, was formally opened Jan. 26, 1880, under the most favorable auspices, by a lecture delivered by the Rev. T. S. Johnson. Its first term closed May 18, 1880. This institute supplies a long-felt want in Lebanon, and many of its young men, as well as those of more advanced years, have taken advantage and derived the benefits of the instruction here received under the best of teachers. The second term began September, 1881. It has been a great success, and much is due to those who have it in charge, whose energy and perseverance have made it to rank with the best. It excludes no one, but gives a free and liberal education to all. In the winter of 1881 and 1882 a course of lectures was delivered before it and under its auspices by many eminent and literary men of the country.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS OF LEBANON.

The Frei Lebanoener was the name of the first newspaper printed within the limits of Lebanon County, so far as we have been able to discover. Prior to this the newspapers of Harrisburg, the county-seat, and of Reading, both English and German, were the only means of intercommunication the people had with each other in thought and opinion. The Frei Lebanoener was established by Jacob Schnee Jan. 1, 1807, at Lebanon. It was a four-page sheet of three columns to the page, and was printed in the German language in an old stone building a few doors north of the Advertiser office on North Ninth Street, in what is known as the Greenawalt building. It was continued until 1809, when Jacob Stoever purchased it and changed its title-name to

The Libanon Morgenstern, and continued its publication until 1837, when he sold it to Samuel Miller, who published it only a few months, when it was discontinued, and Stoever took back the material. In 1851 the material, etc., was incorporated with the Advertiser office, where it yet remains, much of it in as good condition as when brought from England three-fourths of a century ago.

The Unpartheiische Berichter was also a weekly, the first number appearing 1st of January, 1816, with Joseph Hartman as editor, proprietor, and publisher. Its motto was, "We are all Republicans—We are all Federalists." Mr. Hartman died in 1860. In 1826 he changed its title to the Pennsylvanische Beobachter, which was published on the site of the building now (1883) occupied by Bixler's confectionery store. In 1837 it was changed to the Wahrer Demokrat, which publication is being continued by S. Danielius at No. 136 North Ninth Street.

The Lebanon Telescope and United Republican was published by H. W. Petersen in January, 1821. We have no knowledge as to the extent of this newspaper venture, but it is hardly possible that it was printed more than a few months.

The Lebanon Courier was begun about 1820, and among its first subscribers were some of the pioneer settlers of the Lebanon Valley. It passed through various hands until Nov. 9, 1836, when Joseph Gleim became editor and proprietor. In 1841 he was succeeded by George Frysinger, who conducted it until December, 1844, when it passed into the hands of Brower & Worth. In 1846, Mr. Brower sold his interest to John W. Killinger, who was connected with the paper two years, when he disposed of his share to his partner, Col. T. T. Worth. The latter conducted it alone up to 1855, and then sold a half interest in it to Tobias Reinoehl, since which time the firm has been Worth & Reinoehl. The circulation of the paper and general interests of the establishment have steadily increased, and now the Courier ranks among the leading country papers of the State, both in circulation and influence, and may be regarded as a permanent and valuable institution. It was formerly an advocate of the old Whig party until the organization of the Republican party, to which it has since adhered. It may properly be called the veteran English journal of the county, and its weekly visits would indeed be sadly missed where in long bygone years it has been a welcome messenger of the news of the day. It is a thirty-six-column sheet, with beautiful mechanical execution.

The Lebanon Advertiser.—The first number of the Advertiser was issued July 4, 1849, by William M. Breslin, editor and proprietor, who still owns and conducts it, in a two-story frame building on Cumberland Street, west of Ninth, now Market. On the 20th of October, 1857, it was removed to the second story of Adam Rise's building, on Nov. 11, 1859, to the second story of Funck's Hall, and on April 1, 1868, to its present location on the first floor of the Advertiser building, on North Ninth Street. It was at first a seven-column paper, and remained such until Sept. 20, 1865, when its advertising patronage had increased so largely that it was found necessary to add a column to each page, and to lengthen the columns considerably. Three years subsequently another enlargement became a necessity, and it was increased to nine columns a page, its present proportions. It was printed on a Washington hand-press until May 4, 1865, when a steam-engine and paper presses were introduced. In politics it is Democratic, and is the organ of the Democratic party, and the only English Democratic paper in the county.

The Boy of Seventy-Six was the name of a paper established in 1854, but which, after a brief publication, was discontinued for want of sufficient support, it having to contend with three other well-established newspapers.

The Lebanon Democrat, a weekly journal, was started in 1827 by John and Joseph Miller, as an Anti-Masonic paper, and its publication continued under various editors and publishers until 1865, when it was changed to

The Pennsylvanier by John Young, who had been its editor since 1851. This paper was printed in German, and continued until November, 1880, when Mr. Young changed it to the Volks Zeitung (People's Gazette), which he still owns and publishes. It is the Republican German organ of the county, and has a circulation of three thousand. It is a thirty-six-column newspaper, and is printed at Nos. 14 and 16 South Eighth Street. Mr. Young was born in Lehigh County, and at the age of fourteen went into the office of the Bucks County Intelligencer to learn the printer's craft. After his apprenticeship was over he established the Neutralist at Skippackville, Montgomery Co., in 1845. He subsequently took an interest in the Lehigh Patriot, a German paper, at Allentown.

The Lebanon Valley Standard and Weekly Times was established in October, 1871, by C. M. Bowman. It was for some time conducted on a new principle original with its editor, and on which special local features he secured a copyright April 11, 1874. By his plan each important town in the county had its own representative paper, and although printed at the Standard office, but with the names of the towns on them, and with correspondents in each town where these journals circulated, he obtained and gave all the home news of the points they represented. It is a Republican newspaper, a four-page sheet of thirty-six columns, and is published at the Times building, No. 854 Cumberland Street. Mr. Bowman also printed a religious newspaper, and a monthly Sunday-school magazine, and three monthly journals for other parties, which had a combined circulation of twenty thousand.

The Lebanon County Independent was established by the Independent Publishing Company, and its first number appeared May 11, 1882. It is published weekly by Joseph H. Light, publisher, at No. 132 North Ninth Street, Lebanon. It is devoted to county and local interests, and contains in a condensed form all the important general, domestic, and foreign news. It is noted for carefully and intelligently watching and investigating the acts of those in authority, who expend the public money in the administration of the county, State, and national finances, and from time to time places the results before its readers for their examination, with a view to bring about a more capable and honest performance of official duties. It invites discussion of all matters of public interest, and prominent attention is given to educational, mechanical, agricultural, and scientific topics. It is edited with ability, and its mechanical execution beautiful. Its publisher, Joseph H. Light, has had much experience in editing and reporting.

The Lebanon Daily News was established in September, 1872, by John and James Smith, who published it about a year, when the present proprietors, Sharp & Reinhard, purchased it. It is published daily (Sundays excepted) at No. 13 South Eighth Street. It is a twenty-four-page sheet, independent in tone, and largely devoted to local and county news.

The Lebanon Daily Times, a twenty-eight-column newspaper, was started in the spring of 1876 by C. M. Bowman, its present editor and proprietor. It is a Republican journal of recognized ability and standing among the State press, and has a large circulation in the Lebanon Valley.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

This monument is on a beautiful lot located on the corner of Eighth and Lehman Streets. On April 1, 1870, G. Dawson Coleman and George Hoffman, trustees of the monument association, transferred the lot to the county which now has charge of it.

The following are the inscriptions upon it: North side, "Port Royal, Vicksburg," with emblems of an eagle, cannon, anchor, etc., carved above.

West side, "Memory of the Soldiers and Sailors of Lebanon County, Fallen in Defence of the Union;" and below, "Fair Oaks, Fredericksburg."

East side, "Erected by the Citizens of Lebanon County, Anno Domini, 1869;" and below; "Wilderness, Chattanooga."

South side, "Antietam, Gettysburg," with emblems carved above of a shield, flags, guns, etc.

WATER-WORKS.

By an act of April 15, 1869, the borough was authorized to negotiate a loan, not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars, to construct its works, to be under the control of three water directors annually chosen in January by the Council, a water superintendent in like manner elected. By the subsequent acts of April 13, 1870, May 5, 1871, and March 30, 1872, additional facilities were made for these works and the public convenience.

LEBANON GAS COMPANY

was incorporated March 29, 1856. Of its incorporators the following were the board of managers: John Ulrich, president; John W. Mish, secretary and treasurer. Jacob Weidel, Simeon Guilford, John George, Adam Grittinger, and David Bowman. The next president was Jacob Weidel, in 1857, who continued in this position until his death, in July, 1873. His successor was Dr. George Ross, who held the office till his decease, in November, 1880, when the present incumbent, Col. T. T. Worth, was elected.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

This bank was organized May 22, 1856, as a State bank, and was called the Lebanon Valley Bank. In 1862 it was changed into the First National Bank, its charter number being 240. G. Dawson Coleman was its president from its organization in 1856 until his death in 1879, when he was succeeded by Horace Brock, the present incumbent. George Gleim was cashier until he resigned, Nov. 30, 1875, when J. W. Mish succeeded him. Its directors are Arthur Brock, Simon Cameron, George Smuller, James Young, Horace Brock, J. W. Mish. Its capital stock is fifty thousand dollars, with a surplus of twelve thousand five hundred dollars. For some two years its banking rooms were on Ninth Street, but have since been at its present location, on Cumberland just east of Eighth.

THE VALLEY NATIONAL BANK OF LEBANON.

It was organized in June, 1857, as the Lebanon Valley Bank, under the State laws. In 1864 it was merged into a national bank, its charter number being 655. John George was president from 1857 to his death in 1876, and was succeeded by George Hoffman, the present incumbent. Joseph Karch was cashier until his decease in 1880, when his son, Jacob B. Karch, was appointed. Its directors are George Hoffman, T. T. Worth, Cyrus P. Miller, George H. Reinoehl, Arthur Wilhelm, M. G. Friels, Jacob Bomberger, David M. Rank, and Charles H. Killinger.

Its first rooms were in the post-office building on Cumberland Street until 1880, when they were removed to the present location, No. 29 North Eighth Street.

LEBANON NATIONAL BANK.

This bank was chartered as the Lebanon Bank, Aug. 23, 1831. Its commissioners to receive subscriptions for stock were Jacob B. Weidman, Henry Boyer, John Ley, Peter Schulze, George W. Kline, Thomas Harper, Dr. John W. Gloninger, Christian Snavely, and John Shertzer, who reported fifty subscriptions for two thousand and eight shares. It was merged into a national bank in 1864, with its charter number 680. Its first president was William Moore; second, William Lehman; third, Dr. John Gloninger; fourth, Jacob Roedel; and, fifth, Christian Henry (present incumbent). Its first cashier was A. W. Burns until 1836, when he was succeeded by George Gleim. His successor, E. A. Uhler, continued until April, 1881, when the present incumbent, James M. Gossler, was appointed. Its directors are Christian Henry, Grant Weidman, Dr. H. H. Roedel, Rudolph Miller, Samuel Light, Michael Kreider (C. S.), Joseph G. Heilman, John Becker, and George G. Heilman. Its banking house is on South Ninth, between Cumberland and Chesnut Streets. It is the oldest banking institution in the county, and is now putting up a new building at the corner of Ninth and Cumberland Streets.

LEBANON DIME SAVINGS-BANK.

This savings-bank was chartered March 15, 1871. Its presidents have been John W. Mish, to January, 1874; Henry T. Hoffman, to August, 1875; A. R. Boughter, to Dec. 3, 1875; George Gleim, to June, 1879; Dr. George Ross, to his death, Nov. 30, 1880; and since then Josiah Funck. George D. Rise has been cashier since its organization. The directors for 1883 are Robert H. Coleman, Josiah Funck, J. Taylor Boyd, Charles H. Killinger, Allen D. Hoffer, George D. Rise, Christian Shenk, and J. H. Redsecker. Its banking office is No. 812 Cumberland Street.

A new site, corner of Cumberland and Eighth Streets, has been purchased, and a handsome brown stone building, with safe-deposit vaults, will be erected in the spring of 1884.

FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' BANK is not now in operation. John Meily was president, and John Evans cashier. Its banking building was No. 812 Cumberland Street.

NORTH LEBANON DIME SAVINGS-BANK was located at No. 611 North Ninth Street, of which William Eckenroth was president, and Theodore B. Klein cashier.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

An act of the Legislature of March 25, 1864, authorized the establishment of a fire department, and the borough to borrow two thousand five hundred dollars to be appropriated towards the same. The act of March 20, 1867, empowered the borough to borrow ten thousand dollars for the erection of an engine-house for the use of the Perseverance Steam-Engine and Hose Company. By the ordinance of the borough passed Aug. 18, 1873, all the fire and hose associations were formed and united in the fire department of the borough, to be under the general direction of the burgess and town council.

The officers of the Lebanon fire department are elected annually by three delegates chosen from each company, and at present are: Chief Engineer, John W. Harbeson; First Assistant Engineer, Harvey B. Houck; Second Assistant Engineer, William H. Boltz.

The department consists of three steam fire companies, three hose companies, and one hook-and-ladder truck. There are four thousand feet of hose in use, and the department, it is due to state, is in a high state of efficiency.

Perseverance Steam Fire Company, No. 1.—The Perseverance Fire Company, located on Willow Street, was instituted May 12, 1849, and has been a continuous organization to the present day. It is in fact a reorganization of the Cedar Fire Company, organized in 1773, the first fire company in this town. The first president was Francis H. Ebur, and secretary, Henry O. Derr. Present president, Geo. B. Ulrich; secretary, I. W. Harbeson; treasurer, Adam Rise. The company purchased from John Agnew, of Philadelphia, a new third-class hand-engine, the first suction-engine in Lebanon County. Hose were afterwards secured, and the old "ranks and buckets" style, in vogue for many years, was revolutionized whenever water could be drawn from the creek or a cistern. The first hose-cart in the borough was also manufactured about this time. In 1863 the company, seeing that the growth of the town required a corresponding improvement in fire apparatus, adopted the name of Steam Fire Company, No. 1, and ordered a steam fire engine from L. Button & Son. The engine, which was the first steamer in the county, arrived the following year, and was tried in the presence of a large number of citizens, and by its splendid work proved highly satisfactory.

In 1861 two full companies were enlisted for the Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years, from the Perseverance Company, and from the manner in which this regiment distinguished itself it is needless to say that many a brave member never returned to renew his fidelity to the "Perseverance." When water was introduced into the borough in 1872, it fell to the lot of the "Perseverance" company to be first in extinguishing a fire from the fire-plugs, and considering the threatening destruction at the time of an extensive manufacturing establishment, the honor is one that may well be worn with pride by any fire company. From this brief account it will be seen that the "Perseverance" is justly entitled to the honor of being the pioneer fire company of the town by its keeping pace at all times with the march of improvement.

The Union Fire Company, No. 1, was organized Tuesday, Feb. 22, 1780, at the public-house of Casper Snavely (now the American House), and continued as such organization up to this time without interruption. The facts as given below are taken from the records of the company.

On the 22d day of February, 1780, a number of the leading citizens of the town met with the members of the Lebanon Cedar Fire Company (which had already been in existence for some time) for the purpose of organizing another company. At this meeting the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That the town of Lebanon be divided as follows: The citizens on the east side of Market Street shall comprise one fire company, and the citizens west of Market Street one fire company. It was also resolved that the company west of Market Street be called the 'Union,' and the other east of Market Street continued under the name of 'Lebanon Cedar.'" Owing to this division of the town many who were formerly members of the Cedar became members of the Union.

The first officers of the company, elected at this meeting, were as follows: President, Judge Phillip Gloninger, who was re-elected president of the company for a number of years; Secretary, Henry Keller; Treasurer, Casper Snavely.

The records of the company were kept in the German language up to 1840.

It was agreed that meetings be held only every three months at different public-houses, and also that each member of the company be compelled to provide himself with a leather bucket and bag.

The meetings of the company were regularly held. Not much of importance transpired until the year 1795, Peter Gloninger was appointed to draw up articles for the better government of the company, which articles were adopted March 21, 1795, and are entered on the minute-book in the German language as "Artikel der Union Feuer Company," and contained a preamble and seven sections. The preamble reads as follows: "Whereas the citizens of the Western portion of the town of Lebanon, being fully convinced of the great benefit and help a well-organized fire company may be for the better and more complete protection of our own and other citizens' houses and properties against fire, we, the aforesaid citizens, regard it as absolutely necessary to renew the already established fire company, under the name of the Union Fire Company, and to pledge ourselves to the following articles,"—after which follow the articles, seven in number, subscribed to by forty-six members, all in the German language. Afterwards the number was increased to over one hundred.

While the Cedar Fire Company had a hand-engine, the Union for a number of years existed as a "bag-and-bucket company," the two working in harmony with each other, and frequently holding their meetings at the same time and place. On Saturday, Feb. 22, 1807, the last of these joint meetings was held at the house of John Dubs, as a new hand-engine had been purchased in the mean time. At this meeting it was resolved that the old fire-engine shall receive the necessary repairs; shall be placed upon a new wagon, the same as that of the new engine, said repairs to be paid out of the money in the hands of Jacob Arndt, treasurer, and, if any of the money be left, it shall be equally divided between the two companies. It was also resolved "that at the next meeting lots shall be cast which of the two companies shall take the old and which the new fire-engine." After the engine was repaired the amount of money which fell to the Union was £18 15s.

The next meeting of the company was held Saturday, May 30, 1807, at the house of Philip Greenawalt. At this meeting a number of members paid their dues. After the transaction of other minor business, Mr. Jacob Embich was appointed to meet a similarly appointed person of the other company, for the purpose of casting lots as to which company should receive the old and which the new engine. Mr. Embich immediately withdrew from the meeting for the purpose of discharging the duties imposed upon him. He afterwards returned, and reported that the lot fell to this company to take the old fire-engine. (This was the first and original hand-engine brought to Lebanon.) The company then adjourned, to meet Saturday, Aug. 27, 1807, at the house of Carl Gleim. This meeting was accordingly held, and, after noting absentees and receiving dues from those who were absent at the last meeting, it was reported that the old hand-engine was in a very unsatisfactory condition, when it was resolved that Jacob Embich be empowered to place the hand-engine in a good working order. At the next meeting, Saturday, Nov. 27, 1807, Mr. Embich reported that he had conferred with Mr. Baltzer Seiss, of Harrisburg, who recommended that the old box could not be repaired, and a new one must be made for the old engine. This report was received, and Mr. Embich and Mr. Jacob Arndt were empowered to have the same made. In February, 1808, it was reported that Mr. Seiss visited Lebanon, and then placed the engine in a working condition.

The first engine-house stood on the lot of the Hon. Peter Gloninger, and at a meeting held Aug. 27, 1808, Hon. John Gloninger moved that a new house be erected, as the old one was too small, provided Hon. Peter Gloninger would give his consent. Christian Snavely was appointed to see Mr. Gloninger and obtain permission, and at the next meeting reported that the new house was built, except the painting.

At a meeting held Aug. 31, 1816, it was resolved that the fire-ladders shall be secured with a lock, and the key placed in the possession of Philip Huber. Members were allowed the use of a ladder for private purposes, provided they returned it the same day; failing to so return it, they were fined one dollar.

May 27, 1820, Mr. Emanuel Meily was instructed to examine the hand-engine and report its condition. May 31, 1828, Jacob Arndt, John A. Zimmerman, and Jacob Karch were appointed to have the engine rebuilt. May 26, 1832, it was ordered that the fire-ladders be removed from the market-house, where they had been kept up to this time. Feb. 29, 1840, it was resolved to ring the bell at the Reformed Church in case of fire. On the last Saturday in May, 1841, a parade of the company was held in Market Square.

In this parade the Lebanon County Fire Company was invited to participate, it being the only other fire company then in existence, the Lebanon Cedar having been disbanded. On May 28, 1842, Jacob B. Weidman, Esq., was appointed to make application to have the company chartered. In 1843, Messrs. John B. Weidman, Samuel Greenawalt, and John H. Kluge were appointed to negotiate for a new engine. This engine was afterwards bought by Jacob Stoever in Baltimore for four hundred dollars. This year also a new engine-house was built on the ground of Jacob B. Weidman, the entire cost of which was sixty-seven dollars.

In May, 1849, the Perseverance Fire Company was organized, and procured a hand-engine in November of that year. Not having a place to house their engine, they asked permission to keep it in the house of the Union Fire Company, which was granted. In February, 1850, the engineers of the Union were instructed to "notify the Perseverance Fire Company to remove their engine before the 1st of April." May 25, 1850, the engineers reported that the Perseverance engine was still in the house of the Union, when they were instructed to "again give notice to the officers of the Perseverance Fire Company to remove their engine within two weeks." In 1854 the Lebanon County Fire Company was merged into the Union, and at a meeting held February 25th of that year, the following was adopted: "That the 'Union' and 'Lebanon County' fire companies be and are hereby united under the charter of the former company."

The engine-house, built in 1843, was afterwards removed to the corner lot of the Academy school building. Afterwards the wheelwright-shop of Henry Derr, on the lot where John Gates' blacksmith-shop now stands, on Willow Street, was converted into an engine-house. In 1858 the company moved into its present quarters on South Ninth Street, which is an excellent fire engine-house, supplied with all the modern improvements. Prior to the purchase of the Amoskeag steamer, a first-class hand-engine was used by the company. This was bought of John Agnew, Philadelphia, and was in service until the year 1868, when it was sold to several gentlemen at Fredericksburg, this county, where it still is. On Dec. 26, 1866, the present steamer, a second-class Amoskeag, was received, and has been in active service ever since. This steamer cost five thousand dollars. The company has an elegant parade glass hose-carriage, which is pronounced one of the finest in the State, and cost the company two thousand dollars.

On March 19, 1866, the first charter for a "steam" fire company was granted to the Union, and on April 16, 1866, the Perseverance Fire Company received its charter as a "steam" fire company, as both companies heretofore only existed as "fire" companies.

In 1880 the company celebrated its one hundredth anniversary. In this year the engine-house was remodeled, and the parlor newly furnished with fine

Brussels carpet, large, handsome oil-paintings and mirrors, and a beautiful set of furniture. In 1881 the Union drew the prize at the State Firemen's tournament, for having the greatest number of men in line.

The Union Fire Company ranks among the finest-equipped and best-managed companies in the State, and its membership always comprised some of the best and most active citizens of the town. Prominent among them were Peter, Philip, and John Gloninger, John B. and Jacob B. Weidman, John W. Killinger, J. H. Kluge, John Krause, William M. Breslin, Col. David S. Hammond, J. B. Hiester, Joseph Shantz, Col. William Shirk, Lorenzo C. Shirk, the McConnells, Uhlens, Snavelys, Reinoehls, Greenawalts, Funcks, Gasserts, Lousers, and many others.

The company at present has over six hundred members enrolled on its books. George H. Spang is its present efficient presiding officer, and has been for the last ten years, to whom much of the success of the company is due. Daniel Musser is the secretary, and Christian Henry, treasurer. The company is at present making arrangements for the purchase of a pair of horses to be used in drawing the steamer to and from fires.

Lebanon Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1.—This company was organized May 24, 1861. Its first officers were: President, Dr. Cyrus D. Gloninger; Secretary, Joseph L. Lemberger; Treasurer, Henry Derr. It was incorporated April 18, 1872, with the following incorporators: Cyrus D. Gloninger, William Shirk, Grant Weidman, C. R. Lantz, John A. McConnell, C. Mark, John Reinoehl, Daniel G. Miller, D. W. Miller, Jacob B. Karch, J. L. Lemberger, Charles K. Arndt, William W. Murray, A. H. B. Seltzer, Tobias Reinoehl (S. S.), W. D. Rauch, Tobias Reinoehl (J. S.), Joseph McConnell, S. S. Ramsey, A. H. Richey, John A. Shaak, J. B. Shaak, M. D. Hollinger, Cyrus H. Mark, John P. Lenich. Its presidents have been Dr. Cyrus D. Gloninger, Col. William Shirk, A. B. Houck, and Joseph A. McConnell. The company's new house, on South Eighth Street, was erected in 1882, and its corner-stone laid May 24th of that year, being its twenty-first anniversary, with grand Masonic ceremonies. The plan of this elegant building is twenty-two feet front on Eighth Street, running back sixty-five feet, and built of brick, the front being of Philadelphia pressed brick, with brownstone quoins and trimmings. The first story is thirteen feet high, the second twelve, and the former has two doors in front, the larger one for the passage of the truck, and ten feet wide, with its entire floor in one room and the stairs going up in the rear end. The second story has two large rooms, with a small one for committees, etc., the former communicating by sliding doors. It has two smaller windows (three by nine) in the second story front, and a larger double window (five and a half by eleven), to be a memorial of the two deceased presidents of the company, Dr. C. D. Gloninger and William Shirk. The front has a heavy cornice and a heavy wooden railing along the roof, and the structure is surmounted by a cupola of very neat and tasteful design.

Liberty Steam Fire and Hose Company, No. 3.—This company was organized March 5, 1872, and incorporated Aug. 11, 1872. Its motto is "Prolesse Civibus." Its officers for 1872 were: President, John H. Miller; Vice-President, Edward C. Euston; Secretary, John M. Good; Assistant Secretary, Peter L. Zimmerman; Treasurer, Charles H. Meily. Its presidents have since been: 1873, John H. Miller; 1874, Selim S. Thomas; 1875, Edward C. Euston; 1876, John M. Good; 1877, J. Meyer Light; 1878, Charles Allbright; 1879, Cyrus H. Moore; 1880 and 1881, Selim S. Thomas. In its first year of existence it procured, through the generosity of Hon. G. Dawson Coleman and the citizens of North Lebanon, a second-class Clapp & Jones steam fire-engine, hose-carriage, and six hundred feet of hose. Its building is in the square on North Ninth Street.

Friendship Hose Company, No. 4.—This company was organized Sept. 20, 1872. Its first officers were: President, James Brooks; Vice-President, Thomas Ebur; Secretary, T. P. Carmany and T. P. Light; Assistant Secretary, James Johnson; Treasurer, J. T. Reinoehl; Directors, T. Bowman, A. T. Rauch. Presidents, 1873, John McKinney; 1874, Henry McLanghlin; 1875, Jacob Stark, Clinton Boltz; 1876-77, Clinton Boltz; 1878, J. W. Stark; 1879, C. P. Boltz; 1880, William Weber; 1881, J. W. Stark. Its first house was in the Perseverance Steam Fire Company's building; its second, in City Hotel stable; its third, in Union Steam Fire-engine Company's building; and its fourth, the old "station house," in rear of the court-house, from whence it was removed to present lot and used until the present house was erected, on same lot, corner of Willow Street and Pheasant Alley.

Washington Hose Company, No. 5.—This company was organized Sept. 23, 1872. Its first officers were: President, Henry Loser; Vice-President, F. H. Ebur; Secretary, Joel Dewald; Treasurer, John H. Hoffer; Assistant Secretary, Emanuel Hippard; Chief Director, L. W. Hess; Pipemen, William Hess, Benjamin Ebricht, Simon Musser, Alfred Gates; Reelers, Jeremiah Strayer, Samuel Smith, Henry Gebhard, Wesley Kleiser; Plugmen, Joel Dewald, Henry Loser. There was no change in the presidency and secretaryship until 1877, when George H. Reinoehl was elected to the former and J. D. Brown to the latter, which he has since held. In 1878, Dr. Samuel Weiss was elected president, and continued in office until 1880, when he was succeeded by George H. Reinoehl, who is still president. Its building is located on South Seventh near Walnut Street.

Humane Hose Company, No. 6.—This company was organized in 1872. Its presidents have been Selim S. Thomas, William R. Hoffman, Adam Behny, and Allison Reidel. Its building is on North Tenth Street.

OFFICERS OF THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

- 1874.—Chief Engineer, George H. Spang (Union); First Assistant, Charles Albright (Liberty); Second Assistant, Aaron L. Hain (Friendship).
- 1875.—Chief Engineer, George H. Spang (Union); First Assistant, Charles Albright (Liberty); Second Assistant, Solomon McCauley (Friendship).
- 1876.—Chief Engineer, Charles Albright (Liberty); First Assistant, W. S. Johns (Friendship); Second Assistant, Henry Loser (Washington).
- 1877.—Chief Engineer, Jacob W. Stark (Friendship); First Assistant, John A. McConnell (Hook and Ladder); Second Assistant, Charles Fasnacht (Liberty).
- 1878.—Chief Engineer, Henry Loser (Washington); First Assistant, John W. Zweitzig (Humane); Second Assistant, Aaron McCord (Union).
- 1879.—Chief Engineer, Adam Bebnay (Humane); First Assistant, Samuel P. Reinehl (Liberty); Second Assistant, George D. McLaughlin (Union).
- 1880.—Chief Engineer, Selim H. Thomas (Liberty); First Assistant, J. C. Shirk (Friendship); Second Assistant, Henry Huber (Union).
- 1881.—Chief Engineer, John W. Harbeson (Perseverance); First Assistant, James B. Miller (Washington); Second Assistant, Jacob E. Reinehl (Hook and Ladder).
- 1882.—Chief Engineer, John W. Harbeson (Perseverance); First Assistant, James B. Miller (Washington); Second Assistant, Jacob E. Reinehl (Hook and Ladder).
- 1883.—Chief Engineer, John W. Harbeson (Perseverance); First Assistant, Harvey B. Houck (Washington); Second Assistant, Henry Baltz (Hook and Ladder).

THE INDUSTRIES OF LEBANON.

So numerous and important have the industries of Lebanon become that it is not to be expected that to some more than a passing reference can be made. It is these establishments which are making the borough of Lebanon, and they are only equaled by the progress of the town and by the facilities afforded all manner of enterprises by its citizens, who know how to foster industries which are building it up and developing it into a prosperous and flourishing city.

LEBANON STOVE-WORKS, located on the corner of Eighth and Guilford Streets, were built in 1870 by Rosenberger, Light & Co., at a cost of twenty thousand dollars. Since that time additions and improvements have been made amounting to twenty thousand dollars more. In 1882 the parties owning the works were incorporated with the above name, and February 9th of that year a charter of incorporation was granted to D. W. Zeller, Gideon Light, Stephen Light, Job Light, Ezekiel Light, Samuel L. Light, and H. B. Westenberger. Ezekiel Light is president; Samuel L. Light, secretary; D. W. Zeller, treasurer. Steam is the motive-power employed, and sixty men are constantly engaged in the manufacture of stoves. The capacity of the works is thirty-seven stoves per day.

LEBANON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—The foundry and machine-shops of this company are located on North Tenth Street and along the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad; were built in 1867-68, of brick, and at that time had a capacity of twenty thousand dollars per month, with a working force of one hundred men. The company was chartered in 1867, the first officers of the company being C. D. Gloninger, president; John B. Rauch, secretary; E.

A. Uhler, treasurer; J. M. Gettel, superintendent. The remaining directors were D. Mitchell, H. Shenk, George Krause, W. Eckenroth, Adolphus Reineohl, George Rigler, and Levi Wolf. A portion of the original buildings were destroyed by fire in January, 1873, and rebuilt and enlarged the same year, and enlarged again in 1881 and in 1882 to a capacity of one hundred thousand dollars per month, with a working force of three hundred and seventy-five men. The present officers and directors are Adolphus Reineohl, president; Richard Meily, vice-president; John Hunsicker, treasurer; J. B. Rauch, secretary; J. M. Gettel, superintendent; and George H. Spang, George H. Reineohl, A. C. Rigler, John Donges, Rudolph Herr, William Eckenroth, Grant Weidman.

EXCELSIOR NOVELTY WORKS, located at the corner of Seventh and Willow Streets, where thirty persons are employed in the manufacture of coat- and hat-racks, towel-rollers, toys, cigar-boxes, and other work of the kind. These goods find sale in all parts of the United States. Steam is the motive-power for driving the machinery. The works were built in 1878 by Alfred B. Houck, the present proprietor and operator.

THE EAGLE PLANING-MILL, corner of Sixth and Willow Streets, was built in 1870 by Gassert & Light, and in 1875 George Gassert became sole proprietor, and subsequently J. H. Cilley became a partner. In April, 1880, Mr. Gassert sold his interest to D. W. Miller, when the firm-name was changed to Cilley & Miller. The mill has a capacity of fifteen thousand feet of surface-work per day, and twenty men are given steady employment. In the spring of 1883 a lumber- and coal-yard was connected with the mill, in which are employed five men. Value of works, nine thousand dollars.

LEBANON DOOR- AND SASH-MANUFACTORY, located in East Lebanon, is one of the largest of the kind in the State, and was built in 1854 by Longacre & Gable. It was destroyed by fire in 1871, and rebuilt in 1872. In 1879 the property was purchased by W. B. Light, the present proprietor and operator, who employs thirty men annually. The motive-power is steam. The mill has a capacity of eighty thousand dollars' worth of work annually.

LEBANON BOILER- AND MACHINE-WORKS, located on corner of Thirteenth Street and the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, were established in 1873 by Henry Pott & Brother, at a cost of ten thousand dollars. The boiler-house is sixty by one hundred feet in extent, and the machine-shop, forty by sixty feet. Steam-power is employed for driving the machinery in both shops. The annual sales exceed thirty thousand dollars, and over fifty men are given steady employment. The machine-shop was built in 1880, and is under the management of Zimmerman, Failer & Co., while that of the boiler-works is owned by Isaac Pott, C. N. Seidle, and Mrs. H. Pott.

PENNSYLVANIA BOLT AND NUT COMPANY'S WORKS, LEBANON, PA.

MILLS, located near the canal in North Lebanon, were established as early as 1826, by George Reinoehl & Son, who were succeeded by Mark & Reinoehl, who were in turn succeeded in 1855 by the present firm of Adolphus Reinoehl & Charles H. Meily, both natives of Lebanon. About 1868 the present saw- and planing-mills were built and steam-power employed for driving the machinery. The mills, lumber-, and coal-yard cover nearly or quite six acres of land. The works entire furnish employment for an average of forty-five men.

VAN DE SANDE & CAPP'S ROLLING- AND PUDDLING-MILLS are located between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets, south of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, and cover about two acres of land. They were established in 1872 by the present proprietors, William Van De Sande & Jacob Capp. This firm manufacture double-refined merchant-iron, horse-shoe- and guide-iron. The capacity of the works is one hundred tons per week, and furnish employment for forty men. The motive-power is supplied by three engines of from forty to two hundred and fifty horse-power each.

LEBANON ROLLING-MILLS.—These mills were erected in 1867 by Light & Bros. Two heating- and one puddling-furnace were put in operation at that time. In 1847, A. L. Bowman succeeded to the business, and conducted it for one year, when Ephraim Light assumed control and management. In April, 1879, Samuel E. Light succeeded the latter, and from a capacity of sixty tons per week has added facilities and increased the capacity of the mills to one hundred and sixty tons per week. Four double puddling-furnaces and three furnaces for manufacturing light sheet-iron are operated. Eight engines furnish the motive-power of the works. Two hundred and twenty-five hands are employed. The mill building is about two hundred feet square, and in addition a forge is operated, where are produced forty tons of blooms per week. Mr. Light is a native of this county, and has resided in Lebanon since 1867.

THE WEIMER MACHINE-WORKS COMPANY.—One of the largest manufacturing establishments in Lebanon County is now conducted by this company. The works were established in 1858 by William and P. L. Weimer. In 1861 the firm became P. L. Weimer & Bros. In December, 1881, the present company was formed, and the manufacture of the celebrated P. L. Weimer's patent improved blowing-engine and general blast-furnace machinery combined. The many buildings occupied by the company for manufacturing purposes are: machine-shop, 62 by 190 feet; foundry, 65 by 150 feet; car-shop, 60 by 125 feet; blacksmith-shop, 45 by 100 and 80 by 90 feet; erecting-shop, 60 by 100 feet; pattern- and wood-working-shop, 50 by 120 feet; pattern-shop, 40 by 90 feet; office building, a two-story brick, 40 by 45 feet. The foundry has a melting capacity of twenty tons per day, and two hundred men are given constant employment. Mr. P. L. Weimer is president of the company, and L. E. Weimer general manager. The directors are P. L. Weimer, L. E. Weimer, A. A. Weimer, J. Birkenbine, and T. E. Island.

PENNSYLVANIA BOLT- AND NUT-WORKS, located opposite the fair-grounds, south side of Lebanon Valley branch of Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, were built in the fall of 1882, at a cost of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The company was incorporated July 10, 1882, with a capital stock of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The following named were the incorporators and are the present directors and officers: Henry S. Eckert, president; James Lord, general manager and treasurer; Thomas Darlington, Jr., superintendent of machinery; and H. V. L. Meigs, secretary; and Artemus Wilhelm. The motive-power for driving the machinery is steam, and the capacity of the works is five thousand tons of bolts and nuts per year, and in the manufacture of the same two hundred men are employed. It is the intention of the company to largely increase the present plant.

LEBANON IRON COMPANY.—This company, composed of Robert H. Coleman, A. Wilhelm, David S. Hammond, A. Hess, Hugh M. Maxwell, and Thomas Evans, with a capital stock of eighty thousand dollars, is working under a charter granted in 1865 to the "Aurora Iron Company," and name subsequently changed to "Lebanon Tube and Iron Works," and in 1882 changed by the present management to "Lebanon Iron Company." The works of the old companies were located on the south side of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, opposite the Lebanon County Fair-Grounds. The works of the new company are located immediately south of the old ones, and were commenced in September, 1882, and completed in April, 1883, at a cost of nearly two hundred thousand dollars. The capacity of the works when in full operation are twelve thousand tons per year of puddle bar-iron, and employ two hundred men in the manufacture. The directors of the company are Robert H. Coleman, president; A. Hess, secretary and treasurer; Thomas Evans, general superintendent; A. Wilhelm, and D. S. Hammond.

THE MILLER ORGAN COMPANY, located at Lebanon, had its origin in the year 1872. Adam B. Miller, senior member of the firm, comprised of Adam B. Miller and Abraham H. Miller, in 1869, conceived the idea of building an organ, the design for which he drew with chalk on a box-lid. He worked at his hobby on rainy days when his assistance was not required on his father's farm, and in 1870, to the astonishment of his many acquaintances, completed his first organ. Quitting the farm he located in Lebanon, where he engaged with Reinoehl & Meily, and while with them got an order from Daniel Mease for an organ. He made his first trip from home, went to New York and obtained his material, and during his leisure hours completed his second instrument.

Believing his future work lay in this direction and receiving other orders, he built a small shop on his lot, fourteen by twelve feet, began miscellaneous work, and in the fall of 1872 quit work at the planing-mill and launched out in his present business. His shop was soon found too small, and in 1873 he purchased his present site, and erected a building twenty-two by thirty feet, two stories in height. The same year he associated with himself in the business Abraham H. Miller, who became the financial manager of the concern, while he attended to the manufacturing department. Increasing business compelled them to enlarge their buildings in the years 1874, 1880, 1882, and in 1883, and the dimensions of their present organ-manufactory is a three-story building, one hundred and thirty-eight by thirty feet, with a rear extension of seventy feet in length, completing the "T" shape. The popularity of the Miller organ, not only in Pennsylvania, but in most of the other States of the Union, is constantly increasing, and the demands made upon the company for their instruments require increasing numbers of skilled workmen. Some forty different styles are manufactured, and over eighty men are employed in their construction. The steady progress of the Miller Organ Company is attributed solely to the superior workmanship, sweetness of tone, and general finish of the instruments. The company builds thirty organs per week.

NORTH LEBANON TOWNSHIP.

By the act of the General Assembly of March 18, 1840, the two election districts, north and south, of Lebanon township, were made separate townships, and the elections of both to be held in the court-house in Lebanon borough, the dividing line of the townships being the Harrisburg and Reading turnpike road. North Lebanon township as thus formed is bounded on the north by Swatara and Bethel townships, on the northeast by Jackson township, on the south by South Lebanon and Cornwall townships and the borough line of Lebanon, and on the west by North Annville township.

The surface of the township is undulating, but in its western part there is a fine level stretch of land called "Heilman's Dale." The soil is gravel and limestone, a well-defined line of transition from the one to the other occurring in the southern part of the township. All the land is well watered, although there is no considerable stream except the Quitapahilla, which flows through its southeastern border for a short distance. On it the Union Canal Company have constructed works to convey water to the canal from the creek through a raised feeder about half a mile in length. The Union Canal passes through the southern part of the township, and in addition to the works on the Quitapahilla, two large dams have been constructed by the company, one northeast of the borough of Lebanon, the other northwest; they are supplied with water from small creeks, and serve as feeders to the canal. On the northern bank of the canal, contiguous to the borough of Lebanon, quite a town has grown up. It contains over a thousand inhabitants, and was a part of North Lebanon borough from the time of the incorporation of that borough until 1859, when it reverted back to the township. West of it, on the bank of the canal, are the North Lebanon Furnaces, owned by the Coleman estate. From the furnaces the North Lebanon Railroad runs south through the borough in its course to Cornwall. The point where this railroad crosses the canal may properly be considered the junction of the Union Canal, the North Lebanon Railroad, and the Lebanon Valley Railroad, although the latter passes some distance below, within the limits of the borough of Lebanon.

East and west of Lebanon, the Lebanon Valley Railroad is in this township, diverging so as to pass into South Lebanon about two miles east of the borough. It is almost parallel with the general course of the canal, and a short distance south of it. The Lebanon and Tremont Railroad (originally the Pingrove and Lancaster), now operated by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, crosses this township, from north to south, in its western part.

ST. JACOB'S REFORMED CHURCH.

This church organization, worshiping about three miles north of Lebanon borough, occupies what is commonly known as "the Kimmerling Church," so called in remembrance of Jacob Kimmerling, who located in that neighborhood in 1734, and was mainly instrumental in founding the organization, and who donated land for church and burial-ground purposes. Although the existing church records do not antedate 1752, it is well authenticated that the history of the church began at least ten years prior to that date. It is known that a house of worship built of logs stood upon the site of the present church, when in 1752 a new edifice of stone was erected. One authority asserts that the old log church was built by one Peter Slosser at his own cost, and subsequently presented to the church society. The church received from Jacob Kimmerling the gift of twenty-three acres of land for burial purposes, who also donated in 1745 a silver communion service, which is still in use and upon which the story of Mr. Kimmerling's presentation thereof is daily set forth. The records testify that Henry Kelker donated a baptismal font, and that Herman Ekel presented "a bag with handle and bell for use in taking up collections." This contrivance consisted of an open-mouthed bag attached to a long handle and furnished with a small bell, which rang with some persistency while the collector made his rounds, to the end that no worshiper could well evade the consciousness that his mite was earnestly applied for. An entry in the records notes a collection for the purpose of procuring a "sermon book." The sermon book was intended to be used by the school-teacher when by any chance the minister could not attend service. In such cases the school-teacher supplied the parson's place. Although worship was occasionally held at Kimmerling's Church as early as 1742 or prior, no regular services were had prior to the coming of Rev. Michael Schlatter in 1746. This divine was assigned to a large field of labor in Eastern Pennsylvania, and held Kimmerling's within his domain. The Rev. Conrad Templeman was pastor in 1754, and the same year Jacob Kimmerling and George Mace were elected elders. Templeman occupied the pastorate until about 1800, when he was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Hiester. In 1826 the Tulpehocken Church sent Rev. Thomas H. Leinbach to supply Kimmerling's, and since that date supplies have been furnished from the same source. Upon Rev. Mr. Leinbach's death his son, Thomas, filled the pulpit and remained a little more than a year, whereupon, in 1861, Rev. Charles H. Leinbach, the present pastor (brother to Thomas H.), took charge. In 1830 a new church edifice was built, and the name of the organization changed from "Quitopahilla" to St. Jacob's. In 1856 the structure now in use was erected. The membership is one hundred and twenty-five. The trustees are George Strock and Daniel Miller, the elders, David Staeger and Daniel Bleistine. The church is free to all denominations except when required by the Reformed congregation, and the burial-ground set apart under Mr. Kimmerling's deed to the free use of all applicants.

CHRIST (PRESBYTERIAN) CHAPEL.

The pretty little stone chapel near the North Lebanon Furnaces was erected by Mrs. G. Dawson Coleman for the purpose of providing Sunday-school quarters for the children of workmen employed at the furnaces. Later came a suggestion looking to the organization of a Presbyterian Church, and in pursuance thereof Rev. J. A. Rondthaler effected the organization, and was called to be the first pastor. Rev. William B. Reed, his successor, was installed May 4, 1879. The present pastor, Rev. Samuel A. Martin, was installed Jan. 10, 1882. The elders of the church are Hugh M. Maxwell and John Morgan. The deacons are William Reifsnnyder and John H. Euston. The church membership is sixty-four, and that of the Sunday-school two hundred and twenty-five.

EBENEZER (UNITED BRETHERN) CHURCH.

During the year 1871 a successful effort was made to organize a United Brethren Church at what is now known as Ebenezer, and with a membership of about sixty the new organization made a prosperous start. Previous to that period, and for something like thirty years, members of the faith in that locality had enjoyed the privilege of occasional worship in private houses and school-buildings, but no attempt at organization appears to have been made until the year named. In the same year a fine church edifice was erected at a cost of about five thousand dollars. The church's first pastor was Rev. Joel Light, whose successors were Revs. H. H. Gelbach, J. W. Boughton, Schindler, Noll, L. W. Fleicher, and John Brinckley, the latter being the present pastor. The church has a membership of about ninety, and is attached to Lebanon Circuit. The trustees are D. W. Zeller, Joseph Moyer, J. L. Light, C. H. Light, and J. J. Kreider.

NORTH LEBANON ZION'S (U. B.) CHURCH was organized in 1874 with a membership of about forty, and the same year built a house of worship just north of Lebanon borough. The edifice cost about two thousand three hundred dollars. The successive pastors have been Revs. Henry Gelbach, Schindler, Noll, L. W. Fleicher, and John Binckley. The class has now a membership of about thirty, and is attached to the Lebanon Circuit.

SOUTH LEBANON TOWNSHIP.

AFTER the formation of Bethel township, in 1739, Lebanon township had remaining a length of eleven miles and breadth of seven, comprising forty-four thousand seven hundred acres of land. By the act of the Legislature of March 14, 1840, it was divided into North and South Lebanon townships, the Harrisburg and Reading Turnpike road being the dividing line. In 1853, Cornwall Turnpike was erected out of South Lebanon by a line running north and south near its centre. The township is bounded on the north by North Lebanon township and Lebanon borough, on the east by Heidelberg and Jackson townships, on the south by Lancaster County, and on the west by Cornwall township.

In the lower part of the township is the South Mountain, but the rest of the country is level. The soil is mostly limestone and of the best quality. The Quitapahilla Creek has its source in the northern section of the township, near Lebanon borough, while several smaller streams take their rise in the mountains. The North Lebanon Railroad passes for a considerable distance along the boundary-line between South Lebanon and Cornwall townships. Two miles east of Lebanon the Lebanon Valley Railroad crosses the turnpike and enters the township from North Lebanon. The Horse-Shoe Turnpike crosses the South Mountain into Lancaster County at about the centre of the township. Iron ore of the best quality and in large quantity is found in the level fields in the southern part of the township. It, with North Lebanon, occupies the centre of the Lebanon Valley, and comprises a large extent of the most excellent land in the State.

This section of the county being the garden spot of the valley, a large number of Mennonites and Moravians settled in the neighborhood of Lebanon at an early period. In 1742, John Lichty erected in Lebanon township a large two-story house with a "hipped roof," which was used as a regular monthly meeting-place for those of the Mennonite persuasion.

HEBRON MORAVIAN CHURCH.

In June of the year 1742, the one hundred and twenty Moravian brethren and sisters who constituted the first church of their denomination in Bethlehem, Pa., deliberated how they might best labor for the Lord and for His kingdom in this country. Their church council resolved to divide the congregation into two portions, one of which was to abide at home and help to support the other, which, as a "pilgrim church," should evangelize a large portion of the Province. In July ten brethren were selected by the church council "to cast out the gospel net" in ten different districts, in which they were to make missionary tours, and to return every five weeks and report concerning their work. Until the year 1747 there were more than twenty neighborhoods where these missionary brethren had become welcome visitors, and among these were Lebanon, or Quitapahilla, Hebron, and Bethel, which appear to have constituted one congregation.

In the year 1743 the brethren commenced to visit and preach here, and there was an organized congregation called Hebron, about a mile east of the present borough of Lebanon, in 1749 affiliated to that of Warwick, in Lancaster County. It obtained an independent organization in 1750, when Rev. Christian Rauch administered the Lord's Supper to twenty-three communicants. Prior to the year 1748, a Provincial Synod of the brethren had been held here, which, according to some authorities, was the first attended by Moravians exclusively, and presided over by Bishop Cammerhoff. Count Zinzendorf had originated these Synods, the object of which was not only church legislation, but were to be "assemblies of persons of all denominations, who were concerned about their own true welfare and that of their neighbors," and they were to be regulated "by the maxims of the doctrine of Jesus, and by the universal code of love (Liebesplan) of the children of God."

The first Moravian meeting-house, a substantial stone building, was erected in the years 1749-50 at Hebron, about one mile east of Lebanon borough. It bore the inscription,—

"Oratorium Unit. Frat. Lib. Fundat."

The lower story of the church contained four rooms and two kitchens, each kitchen having a huge fireplace and chimney. The second story contained the audience-room, with the pulpit on the south side in the centre, the males sitting on the west side and the females on the east. Vestibules were at both ends on the first and second stories, from which stairs ascended to the garret, it being built precisely like a dwelling-house, to be used by two families, the second floor being used as a church, the minister using part of it as a parsonage, who also kept school. After the battle of Trenton, as stated in the general history, many of the Hessian prisoners were confined at Lebanon, and the building was used as a military prison and hospital.

Among the first communicant members of the Moravian Church at Hebron, Lebanon, and Bethel we find the following:

Philip Beck and his wife, Maria Barbara; John Braun and his wife, Barbara; David Buehler and his wife, Margaret; Peter Kucher and his wife, Barbara; Martin Meyly and his wife, Sabina; Henry Klein and his wife, Anna Maria; John Adam Kettering; John George Hederich and his wife, Anna Catharine; Peter Hederich; Matthew Teiss and his wife, Susanna; John Drachsler and his wife, Catharine; Hans Rewald and his wife, Anna Maria; Michael Uhrich and his wife, Anna Elizabeth; John Tanneberger and his wife, Susanna; Jacob Christman and his wife, Barbara; Michael Kapp and his wife, Margaret; Philip Stöhr and his wife, Anna Maria; Lewis Börn and his wife, Anna Maria; Rudolph Hauck; Barnhard Faber (Fauber) and his wife, Catharine.

In the year 1781 a "Brotherly Agreement" was entered into by the communicants at Hebron, the first article of which is as follows:

"The only Foundation of our Union is Christ & His blood. According to the eternal election of God the Father, we have been called through the Holy Ghost to believe in Jesus Christ our Lord, & to manifest by word & deed that we are His property."

This article gives the key-note of the whole "Agreement," which was signed by Phil. Christian Bader, George Kapp, Joseph Sturges, Lenhart Koehler, Philip Stoehr, Jacob Xander, Daniel Heckedorn, Henry Buehler, Bathazar Orth.

In this list, as well as in the former one, occur names of the ancestors of well-known citizens of Lebanon and adjoining counties.

An extract from the minutes of a church council during the "old French war" gives an idea of the trials to which the early settlers of those days were subjected. It is as follows:

"Dec. 23, 1755. We had a church council. It was resolved, 1, that a brother should go to Bethlehem to tell the congregation of our distress; 2, we agreed to fix strong doors and shutters to our meeting-house; 3, that in case of need we might take refuge in our meeting-house with our wives and children."

From a faithfully-kept record of the attendance at the celebration of the holy sacrament, from the years 1750-76, we find that during this time it was celebrated one hundred and fifty-nine times. The names of those who communed are given for each time, and also those of the absentees, and sometimes also the reasons for their not being present. Thus at the holy sacrament held on the seventh Sunday after Trinity, July 9, 1758, there were twenty-seven communicants present, and eight are noted as being absent, viz.:

Eva Schultz, "on account of sickness."

OLD HEBRON CHURCH, 1750.

Michael and Elizabeth Uhrich, "because their oldest daughter, aged twelve years, went home to the Saviour last night."

Daniel Heckedorn, absent (or excluded) "because of offense given to the world, he having been drunk at Tulpehocken."

Catharine Spittler and Louisa Miess, "on account of slander; they ought to have become reconciled to each other, but would not; the former, indeed, was penitent, but the latter self-righteous."

The Moravian Congregation continued to worship in it until the year 1847, when they built a new church in the town, near the corner of Tenth and Cumberland Streets. This last edifice was destroyed by fire on July 29, 1858. The corner-stone of the present house of worship was laid on the 5th day of October of the same year. In the record of Lebanon borough will be found further reference.

In the ancient graveyard, a mile and one-fourth from the borough of Lebanon, and which was laid out as early as 1748, are many tombstones whose inscriptions are illegible from the lapse of time and exposure to the weather. Those we have been able to decipher are as follows:

Until 1750 Hebron was the principal business centre of this region, when Steitztown (Lebanon) was laid out, and began to grow in importance, and in 1756 both had about the same number of inhabitants. During the Indian troubles, the two towns were both places of refuge for those who fled from the savages, who made frequent incursions on the more northern settlements. A number of families took refuge in the Moravian Church, now used as a barn by Daniel Fulmer. A spirited skirmish took place between the whites and Indians on the property now owned by Joseph Heilman, south of Avon, in which one of the whites was badly wounded and two Indians killed.

The log house built here by Mr. Steager in 1747 has been pulled down, but a portion of the land taken by him is still in the family, and occupied by the fifth generation. The original purchase was made for five pounds English sterling, with the privilege of taking from one to five hundred acres. The Quitpachilla Creek rises on the farm of J. Shaak, in South Lebanon township, and flows westerly through Lebanon borough, North Lebanon, and Cornwall townships, into the Swatara. The first settlement in this region was made at or near Hebron as early as 1721, and in 1723-24 several additional families came, settling in the eastern parts of the two Lebanon townships. These were in 1729 largely recruited by the arrival of many families from the Palatinate in Germany, and clearings began to appear in the dense forests over all the lands in the valley. The Moravians were at that time quite numerous and wealthy, and made earnest efforts to convert the neighboring Indian tribes, but their success in this immediate vicinity was not very great, nor so marked as in other regions, where many savages embraced the Christian religion.

THE COUNTY ALMSHOUSE is in South Lebanon township, about two miles east of Lebanon borough, and half a mile south of the Harrisburg and Reading turnpike.

AVON is a station on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, two miles east of Lebanon, and was early settled by the Lights, Gockleys, Stines, Dodges, Werners, and Kreiders. It has one church,—United Brethren in Christ,—with a neat cemetery attached.

KRAL'S MEETING-HOUSE (Mennonite) is five miles southeast of Lebanon, near the mountain, in a region early settled by the Bambergers, Reists, Brubakers, Kralls, Horsts, Shroms, Shenks, Sticks, Bridenstines, Binners, Buchers, Heiseys, and Dissingers.

SNYDER'S MEETING-HOUSE (United Brethren) is three miles south-southeast of Lebanon, on the Shaefferstown road. Its vicinity was settled by the Snyders, Kendigs, Beckers, Lights, Dundores, Strohm, Koehlers, Schaaks, Begelbachs, Brubakers, and Kapps.

CORNWALL TOWNSHIP.

At the August session of the General Court of Quarter Sessions, 1853, on the petition of divers inhabitants of South Lebanon township, for the erection of a new township out of its territory, Dr. Jonathan Zerbe, Samuel Becker, and Samuel Mosser were appointed commissioners to make the division and establish the boundaries of the new township of Cornwall. Their report, filed on the 26th of September following, was confirmed as follows: "Commencing at a point in the middle of the old road leading to Sheafferstown on the borough line of Lebanon, and running thence south fourteen degrees and fifty minutes east four miles and twenty-two perches to the western end of Peter Smith's barn; thence south twenty-seven degrees and one-fourth east two hundred and twelve perches to a post and stone-heap; thence south fifteen degrees east five hundred and forty-six perches to a post and stone-pile on the line of Lancaster and Lebanon County, on lands known as "Bowman's Swamp."

As thus established the township is bounded on the north by North Lebanon township and Lebanon borough, on the east by South Lebanon township, on the south by Lancaster County, and on the west by Londonderry and South Annville townships. It is divided into two districts for election purposes, known as North and South Cornwall. At the period of erection it contained the following:

Quitopahilla flows through the township near its northern border, and several other considerable streams rise in the mountains and flow northward. The largest of these has received the name of "Snitz" Creek, from the large quantities of dried apples produced in the locality, there being numerous orchards in the section through which the creek takes its course.

At the foot of the South Mountain are the Cornwall ore-banks, from which the township derived its name, so called from Cornwall in England. Close by these ore-banks are the Cornwall Furnaces, around which a large settlement has sprung up. From the ore-banks and furnaces the North Lebanon Railroad, built in 1854, runs north in its course to Lebanon, passing at first within the township, and then for some distance along the line between it and South Lebanon. The Horseshoe Turnpike runs along the foot of the mountain. On this pike, where it crosses the main road from Lebanon to Lancaster, two miles west of the furnaces and five south of Lebanon, is the thriving town of Bismarck, or Independence, formerly called Eby's Corner. The old plank-road from Lebanon to Cornwall, built in 1852, a distance of five miles, was, before 1868, changed into a turnpike.

Much of the early history of the township is given in the sketches of the Lebanon townships. As a general thing, however, during the Indian war of 1755-63 the settlers within the limits of Cornwall were more fortunate than their neighbors to the north of them, who acted as barriers against Indian encroachments. Although they were spared the destruction and desolation caused by the savages, the inhabitants were always on the alert, and rushed to the aid and assistance of their friends on the frontiers proper.

The first school in this township, and the second in this part of the county, was on the land of Balzer Orth. The Moravians had built a meeting-house, in which divine service was held every four weeks. This, for the accommodation of the children of the community, was converted into a school-room, to be used for school purposes when not used for religious services. The teachers of this school were Messrs. Boyd, Irish, Lynch, and Jameson. The institution was altogether English. Schools were organized at an early date at Bachman's, Houck's, Dissinger's, Becker's, and Thomas'. These buildings were all of logs, and the furniture of the most primitive kind. There was a school established at the Cornwall Furnaces, of which Patrick Friel was teacher many years.

GINGRICH'S MEETING-HOUSE (Mennonite) is located three and a half miles southwest of the town of Lebanon. It is a stone building, erected in 1798, the ground, three-fourths of an acre, being purchased that year for six pounds Pennsylvania currency.

The South Mountain occupies the southern part of Cornwall, separating it from Lancaster County. The rest of the country is comparatively level. The soil is mostly limestone, and of an excellent quality. The veyed to the church for that purpose by Thomas Bird Coleman. In 1868 the church was remodeled and enlarged, but in 1877, so large had the congregation become, it was necessary to erect a more commodious edifice. The Coleman heirs contributed liberally to this enterprise, and in 1878 the new church was dedicated. The foundation of the church edifice rests upon solid rock, some places the excavation being eighteen feet deep. The foundation wall is four feet thick, laid in cement. Above the ground line the wall is two feet ten inches, and at the top of the building two feet five inches thick. The entire building is lined with a nine-inch brick wall laid in hydraulic cement, with air-passages between the stone and brick walls. The size of the building in its exterior is forty-eight by eighty-one feet. The interior is forty-two by sixty-seven feet. The outer wall of the building is of blue limestone trimmed with brown sandstone. The limestone are from the Donaghmore quarries, the brown and white sandstone from the Cornwall estate. The building is one of the most substantial, perfect, and beautiful church edifices in the land, a credit to Methodism, and a monument to the very excellent lady, Mrs. Thomas Bird Coleman, whose name must ever live in connection with the history of that church.

As early as 1794 we find Cornwall named among the places where Methodist preaching had been established. It was connected with different circuits, and not until 1859 was Cornwall set off as a station; from that period until the present the pastors have been: 1859, Wesley C. Best; 1860, William Smith; 1861, Thomas M. Griffith; 1862, James F. Reynolds; 1863, John R. Bailey; 1864, John S. J. McConnell; 1865-66, William Snowdells; 1867, H. F. Isett; 1868, William L. McDonnell; 1869-70, T. C. Pearson; 1871-73, E. C. Griffiths; 1874-76, John W. Sayres; 1877-79, George G. Rakestraw; 1880, ———.

WITMER'S MEETING-HOUSE is near Independence (Bismarck Post-Office), in a region early settled by the Witmars, Bachmans, Kreiders, Bowmans, and Spanglers.

INDEPENDENCE VILLAGE (Bismarck Post-Office) is located one mile west of Cornwall, on the "Horse-shoe Pike." Its close proximity to the great Cornwall estate makes it an important town, and it contains about five hundred inhabitants, mostly of persons connected with the works or tradesmen.

GEOLOGICAL FORMATION.—According to the theories of Professors Rogers and Booth, the great Cornwall iron-ore deposit, by far the most extensive, and one of the most interesting in the State, is situated at the outcrop of the primal slates, where they arise from beneath the auroral limestone in Lebanon County, on the southeast border of the Kittocthinny Valley. The ore strata are embraced in three hills, having a nearly east and west range. These hills are flanked to the north by the auroral limestone, and south by the overlapping, unconformable Mesozoic red sandstone. The eastern or "big" hill is elevated three hundred and twelve feet above the level of the creek at its base. The middle hill is ninety-eight feet high, and the western hill seventy-eight feet high. The bounding wall of the ore in the Big Hill is a heavy dike of trap, which varies in regard to texture and composition as the feldspar or hornblende element predominates. Besides this general outer wall of trap there are several smaller dykes of the same material, in one or two instances interstratified with the ore; in other cases they appear as simple isolated columns of rock surrounded by ore. The ore in this hill is nearly horizontally, though irregularly, stratified, and presents every possible aspect from slaty, greenish gray to dark green and dark, ferruginous brown and black. In the middle hill masses of light-blue, flinty and magnesian limestone are found imbedded with and surrounded by ore. They are devoid of regular form, and evidently not in situ. On this hill several small veins or bunches of copper have been wrought. The thickness of these veins varies between half an inch and three inches. The usual varieties of copper ore extracted are gray protoxide, bright varieties of red dioxide, green and blue carbonates of copper, and also rich specimens of sulphuret.

The iron ore in Cornwall is the upper primal slate itself, or its highest beds, rather, in a very ferruginous condition. The trap-dikes convert the ore to a more highly crystalline form, and endow it partially with magnetism. These mines were formed by igneous and volcanic action, causing the separation of the iron from the primal slates, and the aggregation of the immense masses of rich ore. The process has been illustrated to be somewhat similar to that of a furnace operation, in which the iron, trap-rock, and primal slates were all in a state of fusion, and were by some operation placed in the positions in which they are now found, the ridge of altered primal slates to the north of the mine hills representing the cinder-bank of this gigantic furnace operation in nature.

Other geologists and scientists contend that the Cornwall mines are within and at the borders of the Triassic-Mesozoic red sandstone-formation, and that there are good reasons for believing that they properly belong to it, not to the primal slates or the azoic. They argue that the geological structure and mineral associations of these ore deposits are in many respects different from the primal slates, and from the magnetic and crystalline ores of the Huronian and Laurentian formations.

The range and dip of these deposits (according to Mr. Isaac Hoffer and others) and the accompanying strata, generally differ from that of the primal slates and older rocks; and the trap-dikes, almost universally associated with these ores, are also in many respects unlike those of the older formation. On the other hand, they seem to very generally correspond with the Triassic formation, except where they have been disturbed and changed by trap-dikes, and there is scarcely any noticeable difference between the dikes associated with these ores and others in the Triassic. This similarity in range and dip and in the trap-dikes indicates, according to this second theory, close relation, if not actual sameness, in formation. It is also a well-known fact that in no other formation do these trap-dikes constitute so prominent a feature as in the Triassic, and there would seem to be reasonable ground for placing all these similar dikes with their associate ores in the same geological horizon, especially as they are at and within the borders of the same formation. The apparent similarity between these ores and accompanying rocks and some of the ores and rocks of older formations seems to be the only reason for fixing their position outside of the Triassic. But this similarity can be easily explained by the generally-accepted theory of the formation of the Triassic and its trap-dikes. This theory is that the older rocks with their ores, either in a wholly or partially decomposed and disintegrated condition, were washed away (frequently by strong currents) into the mesozoic estuary, and there redistributed and deposited without much change in the character of the material, especially near the borders, so that in many places this material is easily recognized as having been derived from certain older formations. That subsequent to the deposition of the Triassic strata, igneous action produced uplifts and outbursts, which formed the hills and trap-dikes so common in this formation, and changed and metamorphosed the redistributed material. If this theory is correct, it can readily be seen that if the primal slates and the Huronian and Laurentian rocks and their ores were redistributed by strong currents of water (and perhaps down great declivities), that the heavier material and larger particles would be deposited nearest their former position and with the least change in the composing elements, and that the lighter and more thoroughly disintegrated particles would be carried farther from the borders and precipitated in a more changed condition. It is also evident that if this redistributed material (including the ores), unaltered in its constituent parts, was subjected to the proper heat it would again assume almost, if not precisely, the same characteristics and appearance as it had in its former crystalline condition. The few reasons here briefly advanced for fixing the geological position of the Cornwall iron-mines and other related ores in Triassic or Mesozoic red sandstone may not be conclusive, but they furnish the basis for a reasonable and consistent explanation of the phenomena and geological peculiarities exhibited in these interesting and important deposits of ore and the accompanying rocks. Richard Cawling Taylor, an English geologist, made a professional survey of the ore-banks in 1850.

THE IRON-ORE HILLS.—The Cornwall ore-banks are not surpassed even by the famous iron mountains of Missouri. They are situated at the foot of the northern slope of the South Mountain, some five miles south of Lebanon, and are owned by the two branches of the Coleman family and the Grubbs. It is the most remarkable and valuable body of iron ore in the world. It consists of three hills of solid ore, called respectively the Big Hill, Middle Hill, and Grassy Hill. Besides this vast amount of ore actually exposed to daylight, a still larger quantity is covered by more recent formations of the South Mountain. It is estimated that the quantity above water-level exceeds thirty millions of tons, while the deposit probably extends several hundred feet below water-level. Big Hill is over four hundred feet high, and the base covers more than forty acres. In shape it is like a cone, and around its sloping sides a spiral railway has been constructed, ascending to the summit on a grade of two hundred feet to the mile. The road-bed is made of ore, which is the only ballast used. This spiral railway was designed by William Lorenz, then resident engineer of the Lebanon Valley Railroad, and its construction obviates the necessity of using teams to haul the ore to the foot of the mountain. It winds in the shape of a spiral, or rather corkscrew, several times around the Big Hill to its summit, and has sidings constructed to divide the face of the hill into terraces at different elevations. Branch railroads extend to the other two hills, all centering in such a manner that the empty cars can be distributed by the locomotive to the mines along the terraces on any part of the hills, and after being loaded can be collected again and taken to market on the North Lebanon Railroad. The ore is mined in breasts, along which the cars are backed and the ore shoveled into them. There are no shafts sunk as in mining coal, but all the work is done in daylight, and in the open air. For many years the several owners of these ore hills mined just as much as each one needed to supply his furnaces, but with the growth of the trade, and the construction of numerous furnaces in all parts of the State, came a demand for this ore. The ore is a magnetic oxide, containing a great deal of iron pyrites, which, under atmospheric influences, changes into a soluble sulphate, and is washed away by the rain. The nearer it lies to the surface the freer it is of sulphur. The ore is also found of the best quality in the level fields of all the townships that border on the South Mountain. In Cornwall, South Lebanon, and Londondery especially, large quantities are raised and conveyed to the neighboring furnaces. The ore contains occasional veins of copper, and, in fact, a considerable quantity of good copper ore is collected as the quarrying progresses. Middle Hill is about two hundred yards from Big Hill, and has an altitude of two hundred feet above the water-level, and covers about thirty-five acres. The ore is the same as that mined at Big Hill. This hill shows the most perceptible impression made by years of steady mining, though amid the surrounding mass it almost escapes notice. It has been constantly worked for a period antedating the Revolution. The Grassy Hill lies southwest of the Middle Hill, about one hundred yards away. It has been worked for more than twenty-five years. This hill is about one hundred and fifty feet high, and covers thirty acres. Examinations have been made to ascertain to what depth these great bodies of iron ore extend, but that has not yet been determined. From their appearance the supply would seem to be inexhaustible for centuries yet to come.

Before the rebellion of 1861-65, the cry of the South was "Cotton is King." Things have changed since then, and the whole country accords now the kingship (if any exists) to "Pig-Iron." The extent and variety to which pig-iron is applied have increased with the years. Railroads no longer monopolize this trade, but it has its ramifications in every department of industry. Houses, furniture, table and pocket cutlery, machinery, and implements of every description are made of pig-iron, after being subjected to different processes for the purposes intended. Cornwall, as the producer of iron, may justly be styled the "hub of the iron trade." When it became necessary upon demand to ship ore, in order to facilitate their mining operations, as well as to enable each owner to realize his share of the profits, a company was formed, called the Cornwall Ore-Bank Company, with J. Taylor Boyd, a practical miner, and an expert in the knowledge of ores and their respective furnace values, as general superintendent. A commodious two-story office, built of Cornwall sandstone, with a tower surmounted by a cupola, containing a bell to summon the men to and from work, is the headquarters of the general superintendent, and contains a room especially set apart for the meeting of the members of the Cornwall Ore-Bank Company.

Iron-masters away from Cornwall complain of the difficulty of working this ore, while at Cornwall and Lebanon it has been successfully used, and none of the furnaces belonging to the Cornwall estate have scaffolded on this account, except Donaghmore, and that was owing more to a defective construction of the furnace than to the sulphur in the ore. Since it was remodeled no more trouble is experienced, and it is now good for a steady weekly yield of one hundred and fifty tons of number one pig-metal. The ore mined on Grassy Hill contains less sulphur than that found in the other two hills, though it is considered necessary to roast it like the rest before using.

THE FURNACES AT CORNWALL AND LEBANON.—Cornwall has long been the seat of iron manufacture. The famous charcoal-furnace, the oldest in existence, is still in blast and has supplied the iron trade for years, and established a reputation for Cornwall iron, which has grown with the years, until to-day it is regarded as the best brand made by any of the furnaces in the country. This furnace supplied the iron for the cannon and ball made for Washington's army during the Revolution, and its manager for a long series of years was James P. Jackson.

The two old anthracite furnaces are equally known to the iron trade, not only from the fact of their producing a superior quality of pig-iron, but because under their present management they have continued in blast longer than any other known furnaces, saving necessary stoppages from wear and tear, and two of these have only occurred within a period of more than twenty-five years. A. Wilhelm, Esq., the attorney for Robert W. Coleman's heirs, had the furnaces in immediate charge from 1857 to 1882. At North Cornwall two furnaces were built and put in operation in 1876. These were constructed after the most approved designs, and were superintended by Henry C. Grittinger, and were the individual property of William Coleman Freeman.

The last, largest, and unquestionably the most admirably equipped of furnaces, up to the erection, are the Bird Coleman, modeled and constructed by A. Wilhelm, Esq., the general manager of the estate from 1857 to 1882. At a distance they present a massive appearance, and attract attention at once because of their singularly beautiful proportions. There is ordinarily nothing to admire about a furnace, except perhaps the flow of molten iron at the casting hour; but this structure is a perfect architectural beauty. Nor is the wonder and admiration of the visitor confined to its general appearance,—it breaks upon him at every step as he makes a tour of inspection.

The Bird Coleman Furnaces are a dual structure, and this peculiar dual quality is preserved in all the details of the furnace,—in the boilers, pumps, the engine-room, the stock; and casting-houses, even to the handling of the stock at the tunnel-head. The stock-house, sixty by two hundred feet, is entered by five railroad tracks, separated by alternate walls of stone and iron columns. On the left hand side, as you go in along the track, the coal is dumped, and on the left hand side, the iron ore, and at the end of the stock-house, on both sides, are convenient bins for the lime-kiln stone. The filling is done by means of a pneumatic hoist. The ore is thus taken up, and to free it from the sulphur a hot blast has been specially constructed, in which the ore is thrown and the sulphur expelled by the heat, dropped through a pipe into a bin close by the pneumatic hoist, when it is again shoveled into barrows and sent up to be put into the tunnel-head.

The stack, built of fire-brick and incased in an iron sheath, is girdled by a spiral stairway made of railroad iron, and iron steps cast at the anthracite furnace. The boilers are of brick, made on the estate, protected by binders of railroad iron, and the iron doors through which the fuel is supplied are provided with a circular opening and gap, which lifts at the slightest compression of air, to prevent an explosion from accumulated gas. The hot-blast connection with the boilers is in the shape of a corrugated letter S, laid on its face, the object of which is to regulate the expansion of the metal, and render an explosion impossible by securing an even temperature along the pipe that conveys the blast. The roof over the boiler is supported on iron columns that help to bind the walls, and was made of timber cut on the estate, and fashioned and put in place by Cornwall carpenters. Every part of the furnace can be reached from the outside, the parts being purposely so constructed, in order that repairs, when necessary, could be conveniently made, and all the material used in its construction, engines excepted, was supplied directly from the estate. The furnace has also duplicate gas-chambers on the outside of the stack, something new in these structures, which is to relieve the furnace of gas and scaffolding and chilling—the former dread of managers—an impossibility. The casting-house is the finest building of the kind in existence. The walls are sandstone, broad at the base and tapering at the top, constructed plumb on the inside, and the wall inclined outside from the top to the base, giving it the appearance of leaning inward. The roof is of slate, and a more closely jointed and stronger one is not to be found anywhere. The engine is vertical, with a fly-wheel weighing twenty-four tons, and twenty-four feet in diameter, resting on a foundation of fifteen feet cut stone. A duplicate donkey pump supplies the water for feed and fire purposes, and is so constructed that by the withdrawal of a bolt the duplicate character of the pump is exhibited. The fly-wheel is so arranged that a belt can be applied to run a lathe. The water supply of this furnace is drawn from a well sixty-two feet deep and Furnace Creek. The water is pumped from a well into a reservoir, ninety feet above the base of the furnace, which empties into a second reservoir of a million gallons, sixty feet above the base of the furnace, and from there flows into the boilers by gravitation. The large reservoir is also directly connected with the furnace boilers by pipe, to be used in case of damage to the small reservoir or the pipe. The water from Furnace Creek is conducted through a tunnel three and a half feet high and one thousand and twenty-five feet long into the well. There is a dam on Dutch Creek, a neighboring stream, with pipe leading to the well in case the present supply should be found inadequate. The waste water is also conducted into this well, showing that every means has been employed to make the supply ample for all times and all purposes. A neat office, in the prevailing sandstone style, fronts on the wagon road past the furnace about one hundred feet from the casting-house. The day of Jay Cooke's failure, in 1873, marks the completion of this furnace. Its situation is quite picturesque, being on the northern slope of the South Mountain, and bears a striking resemblance to some ancient feudal castle. The original Colebrook Furnaces are sometimes spoken of, but are no longer in operation. They were located at Colebrook, Londonderry township, and were in operation for over seventy years.

The Donaghmore Furnace, at Lebanon, owned by the heirs of Robert W. Coleman, has been long under the management of D. S. Hammond. The Cornwall Furnaces belong to the estate of Robert W. and William Coleman, deceased, which has eight furnaces in all. The North Lebanon Furnaces, of which Charles B. Forney was for years manager, belonged to the late Hon. George Dawson Coleman, and are three in number.

The immense furnace of Robert H. Coleman, at Lebanon, built at an expense of over six hundred thousand dollars, was finished in 1881, and is called the Colebrook Furnace No. 1. This turns out weekly four hundred tons of pig-iron. Colebrook Furnace No. 2 was put in blast in August, 1882.

CORNWALL'S NETWORK OF RAILWAYS.—All the Cornwall furnaces are approached by a single track, which divides into a double track just before entering the stock-houses. The Big Hill has an iron band around it, the Middle Hill is gridironed with tracks, and the Grassy Hill can be reached several ways by rail. The visitor is whisked around the hills and to and from the furnaces in a trice, and more can be seen in a day now than could be heretofore viewed in a week. The Cornwall Railroad, which supplies these furnaces with coal and limestone, is six miles long, with its northern terminus at the Union Canal, in Lebanon. It is the best-paying railroad in the world. The receipts of the road paid for its construction, equipment, annual running expenses, repairs, etc., twelve years after ground was first broken on the line. The road is purely a private freight-road, built in 1854, and paid for by the late Robert W. and William Coleman, of Cornwall. In addition to iron ore, copper ore is also mined, and a crusher, erected at the charcoal furnace, pulverizes it, ready to be put up in one hundred bags, in which it is transported to the United States Mint, at Philadelphia, where it is converted into coin.

In April, 1881, an engineer corps ran two preliminary lines for a railroad from points in Lancaster County to connect with the Pennsylvania Railroad to Cornwall, and a few weeks later finished the survey of what is now the line of the railroad constructed the following year, starting at Conewago station, and running a distance of sixteen miles, terminating at the Cornwall offices. There is but little doubt of its being subsequently continued to Lebanon.

THE CHAIN OF TITLE.—The chain of title to the Cornwall estate begins with a warrant to John, Thomas, and William Penn, dated May 8, 1732, by them assigned unto Joseph and James Turner, who assigned it to William Allen (three hundred acres and allowances), and by him was conveyed for one hundred and thirty-five pounds to Peter Grubb, Nov. 28 and 29, 1737, who died intestate. The proprietaries sold, June 28, 1783, to Peter Grubb, Jr., one hundred and twenty-three and one-half acres additional. The estate descended to his two sons,—Curtis Grubb and Peter Grubb, Jr. The latter conveyed, May 9, 1786, an undivided sixth part of his share in the estate to Robert Coleman. Peter, Jr., died, leaving two sons,—Burd Grubb and Henry Bates Grubb. Curtis Grubb died testate, and directed his executors to sell all his real estate to Robert Coleman for twenty-nine thousand one hundred pounds, except the ore-hills, which was done Sept. 12, 1798. Burd Grubb then conveyed his interest in fee to Henry Bates Grubb, and Henry Bates Grubb conveyed in fee an equal undivided share of his real estate, including the ore-hills, to Robert Coleman. Henry Bates Grubb died intestate, leaving six children,—Edward B., Henry C., Clement B., Mary S., Sarah E., and Alfred B. Grubb. In an action of partition their interest in the ore-hills was adjudged to Edward Bates Grubb, of Mount Hope, Lancaster County, Edward B. Grubb, of Burlington, N. J., and C. B. Grubb, of Lancaster, as tenants in common of the ore-hills.

Robert Coleman died, leaving four sons,—William, James, Edward, and Thomas Bird Coleman. William and Edward sold their interest to Thomas Bird Coleman. James Coleman died, leaving five children,—Robert, George Dawson, Ann, Sarah, and Harriet Coleman. The interest of the three sisters passed into the hands of Robert Coleman, their brother, then a resident of Paris, France, and Hon. George Dawson Coleman, of Lebanon, as tenants in common of the ore-hills. Thomas Bird Coleman died, leaving issue of five children,—Annie C., Isabella, Robert W., and William Coleman,—all of Cornwall. Isabella and Robert W. died intestate, unmarried. William

Coleman died, leaving a widow and two children,—Robert H. and Annie Coleman. The Cornwall Ore-Hills, it will thus be seen, is a tenancy in common, and so held by E. Burd, C. Bates, and C. B. Grubb; Robert and heirs of G. Dawson Coleman; and the heirs of Robert W. and William Coleman. Their interests have been fixed by law as follows:

Messrs. Grubb, sixteen ninety-sixths.
Robert and the heirs of G. Dawson Coleman, thirty ninety-sixths.

The heirs of Robert W. and William Coleman, fifty ninety-sixths.

Of this fifty ninety-sixths, Robert H. Coleman and his sister have the twenty-five ninety-sixths they inherited from their father, William, and also the one-fourth inherited from their uncle, Robert W. Coleman, and the other three-fourths of Robert W. Coleman's twenty-five ninety-sixths is held by Mrs. Col. William G. Freeman and Mrs. Capt. Olden.

The Cornwall, or Coleman, estate, as it is now mostly called, is usually valued at thirty millions of dollars, and embraces thousands upon thousands of acres of lands in Lebanon and Lancaster, much of which is mountain and mineral lands, but a large part of which is valuable farming land. With such immense bodies of iron, the establishments of this estate for their conversion into metal, located around them and at Lebanon, have made a reputation unequalled by any in America, and unsurpassed by any in Europe.

THE CORNWALL FARMS.—Apart from the great iron industry of the Cornwall estate, the extensive landed estate of the Colemans must not be overlooked. It is by far the largest in the State, and devoted almost entirely to farming purposes. It is situated at Cornwall, Lebanon County, and Speedwell, Lancaster County, and contains twenty-two thousand acres. This farm is not divided into distant tracts, but is one contiguous body, and comprises about fifteen thousand acres of woodland, one hundred and five and a half acres of iron ore, known as the Cornwall Ore Hills, while the remainder is in the highest state of cultivation. Some idea of its extent may be formed from the fact that it would occupy the better part of three days to drive around it. There are about fifty miles of road traversing the estate, and in daily use. One of these roads has a continuous length of over ten miles. There are engaged in the direction and control of this estate one manager-in-chief with six assistants under him, while the tenantry compose a body of about one thousand men, women, and children. Hundreds of the best draught horses and roadsters and the choicest strains of cattle and sheep can here be seen, while stock-raising is a specialty.

For the purpose of maintaining a supply of first-class horses, the old Speedwell Forge property in Lancaster County, distant seven miles from Cornwall, has been converted into a stock-farm. The forge, which in days long gone by furnished the iron market of that era with a regular supply, is now a mass of mouldering ruins, the walls overgrown with moss and ivy, and the water-power become a means of irrigation to the land. Of cattle none but the short-horn are kept here. The choicest of cattle and sheep, though raised here, are sent to Cornwall. Among the former class at this place are the celebrated herd of Holstein cattle. There are but two herds in the United States. These animals are remarkable for their beauty, which consists in their deep black color about the head, neck, rump, and legs, while round the centre of their bodies runs a broad, snow-white belt. Some have broader belts than others, occasioned by the action of our climate. The effect of this strong contrast of color is beautiful in the extreme, especially when the animals are browsing on some field of rich, green grass. Next to these in good looks are the Alderney cattle. These are generally of a delicate fawn color, lithe in limb and body, and at a distance bear a strong resemblance to the deer. It is the handsome Alderneys that yield the rich yellow milk and the golden butter, and of them it may with truth be said "they are worth their weight in gold." The lovers of good mutton can have their eyes regaled by the sight of the elegant "Southdown."

There is an orchard here that supplies the owners with all the fruit they want, and which most years gives every man who works by the month on the place a bushel of apples and a barrel of cider. Pears, peaches, plums, and quinces are cultivated, while the gardens of the owners, the manager and his assistants, contain the best grape vines, strawberry, raspberry, and melon patches, and vegetables of all kinds in profusion.

There are thousands of bushels of wheat, rye, oats, and corn raised on this estate. Much is sold, but the greater part is housed and used. Wheat and corn is sent to their mill to be supplied to employees and employers. Every employee on this estate gets a bushel of flour from the Cornwall grist-mill for one dollar and fifty cents per bushel, no matter what the market price may be, and the corn is sold at similar proportionate rate.

That part of the estate located at Cornwall is of a gently undulating character, loamy and easily cultivated. There is a great deal of limestone in the soil, which is used in the furnaces in bulk, and on the soil in the shape of lime. Sandstone is also found in quantities, and all the buildings of the place are constructed of it, except the store and the boilers of the furnaces. The stock- and casting-houses of the new furnaces are built of this material. There is an extensive brick-yard on the farm at Cornwall which makes all the bricks used for building purposes in that vicinity, because it is able to furnish them cheaper than the regular manufacturers. Their own carpenters do all the house- and wood-work wanted in the neighborhood.

Besides this farm the estate owns fourteen hundred and twenty-five acres in York County, known as the "Castle Finn" property. Another large farm called Colebrook, which belonged to the ancestor of the present proprietors, and has by the death of the previous owners become separated in ownership, once formed part of this huge estate. There are charcoal furnaces here, but they have not been in blast for many years, the farm being exclusively used for agricultural purposes.

The entire "Cornwall Estate," its mountains of valuable ore, its immense iron-producing manufactories, its magnificent farms and improved live-stock, and herds of the purest blood, are unequaled in the universe, and are far more worthy of a visit than famed Niagara or Mammoth Cave.

BETHEL TOWNSHIP.

THE Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster County in May, 1739, on the application of inhabitants of Lebanon township, setting forth that they labored under several disadvantages by the largeness of the township, and praying the same may be divided into two townships and one of them be called Bethel, "Ordered by the Court that the division line begin at Swatara Creek, at a stony ridge about half a mile below John Tittle's, and continuing along the said ridge easterly to Tulpehocken township, to the north of Tobias Pickle's, so as in its course to leave John Benagle, Adam Steel, Thomas Ewersly, and Mathias Tice to the southward of the said line; that the northernmost division be called the township of Bethel, and the southern division continue the name of Lebanon." This division was made by a single line run across the township of Lebanon from the Swatara Creek to the original east line of that township, consequently that portion of the territory which was afterwards cut off by the Berks County line was a part of Bethel township from this division in 1739 until the Berks County line was run, which was in the year 1752. It has since been further reduced to form parts of Swatara, Jackson, and Union townships. It is now bounded on the north by Union township, east by Schuylkill and Berks Counties, south by Jackson and North Lebanon townships, and west by Swatara. Its greatest length is thirteen miles and breadth seven. It contains thirty thousand acres of land. The upper part of the township is crossed by two ranges of hills belonging to the Blue Mountains, and the valley between them is called Monroe Valley. North of it, beyond the upper mountain range, is another smaller valley called Swope's Valley. The Swatara Creek flows along the extreme northern boundary of the township, while the Little Swatara, which rises at the foot of the Blue Mountains in Berks County, crosses the southern part of Bethel from east to west. The other principal streams are Elizabeth, Beach, Deep, and Earlakill Runs.

The township was so named for the Moravian establishment on the Swatara called "Bethel," the literal import of the term being the "House of God." This Moravian colony was among the first in Pennsylvania. In 1737, Mr. Spangenberg, the Moravian missionary, having fulfilled his appointment in establishing the mission in Georgia, came to Pennsylvania, where he remained for some time, and thence to St. Thomas, one of the West India islands, to hold a visitation in that mission. He then returned, and remained in Pennsylvania till 1739. Through him, it is said, the United Brethren were made attentive to other Indian nations, especially the Iroquois, or Six Nations. Mr. Spangenberg received the first notice of them from Conrad Weiser, justice of the peace and interpreter to the government in Pennsylvania. They erected a church here about 1740, and the Rev. Johannes Brand Mueller officiated here about the year 1744. The names of their members are still preserved in the "Schwatarer Kirchen Buch, containing ein Verzeichniß der Brueder der Gemeine und deren Kindern welche von den Bruedern sind getauft worden von April Anno 1743." Among their first members here were Rudolph Hauck, Jacob Dups, Wilhelm Fircher, Ludwig Born, Johan Frederick Weiser, Christian Benner, George Miess, Jacob Gausser, Thomas Williams, Franz Albert, Jacob Hantsche, Daniel Born, Michael Kohr, Johannes Spittler, Bernhard Faber, Casper Kohr.

For the early settlers in this as in the other early townships our readers are referred to the official lists of warrantees, given in the general history. They were nearly all Germans, with here and there a sprinkling of French Huguenot and Scotch-Irish. The former looked upon the latter as "der Irish," and there was little sympathy existing between them. It was only when the storm of the Revolution broke over the country that the common cause of both drew them closer to each other, and although prior to that noted era marriages between the two was rare and frequently forbidden by will, after that it became frequent, and at the present the reverse is rare.

The only assessment-list of the township we have found is that for 1751, which is herewith given:

In 1737, Peter Grove took out a warrant for a tract of land, and built a house near where the Mennonite Church now stands. This burned down in 1739. In 1745 he erected another and more substantial one, which is still standing, and which, together with the farm to which it belongs, has never been out of the possession of his descendants. In 1775 the Mennonite Church was built on land donated by Casper Sherrick. In 1765, Peter Grove purchased the old homestead, where the Grove brothers now live. In 1814, John Grove, son of Peter, and father of the present owners, built the saw-mill, and a year later the grist-mill. On the Grove estate is a graveyard, among the oldest in the county, and in its limits several Indians are buried.

Although we have referred in the general history to the Indian war of 1755-64, there are nevertheless many facts which relate especially to the outrages committed in this locality. Notwithstanding there was a line of Provincial forts extending along the frontiers of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Berks Counties intended as defenses against the incursions of the savages, and as places of security, many of the inhabitants of this part of the county were murdered, their houses burnt, their children taken captive.

On Oct. 16, 1755, the Indians fell upon the household of a German family who had emigrated from Reutlingen, Württemberg, and carried off two of the girls, after killing the father and one of the sons, while the other boy was away with his mother. The lot of Barbara, the eldest girl, was never known, but Regina, the youngest, who was scalped without other injury, we shall refer to subsequently. In November, 1755, during the pleasant days of Indian summer, while the settlers were resting in fancied security, imagining it too late for the Indians to dare the rigors of the climate, the savages, depending on the favorable weather which usually occurs at this season of the year, came suddenly on the settlement, and ere any force could be rallied to oppose them killed twenty persons and captured several children, whom they carried away. Among those murdered were Rudolph Candel, John Leinberger, a child of Jacob Wolf, Casper Spring, Mrs. Cola and her two children, and one Philip, a shoemaker at the house of Thomas Bowers.

"Shocking," says the Secretary of the Province in his statement to the Assembly, "are the descriptions given by those who escaped of the horrid cruelties and indecencies committed by the merciless savages on the bodies of those unhappy wretches who fell into their hands, especially the women, without regard to age or sex, these far exceeds those related of the most abandoned pirates."

The early settlers of Bethel, however, were not the men to unresistingly submit to be butchered in cold blood, or to be led away to captivity, and they courageously defended their property and the lives of their families. Many tales of heroic devotion and unquailing courage could be told, had the recollections of the early settlers been gathered and recorded ere the memory of them passed away. But enough remains to show that the tide of battle was varying; that while many early settlers met with an untimely fate in the midst of his family, and in the adopted land where he had hoped to make himself a competence, not every war-party that marched in full paint and war-dress through the Swatara Gap on their way to exterminate some exposed and unprotected family of their hated enemy, the pale-faces, returned as hopeful and numerous as they came; and sometimes, instead of reeking scalps in their belts and captives and spoils, while burning cabins and mangled bodies of slaughtered victims marked where they had been, the dead bodies of their own warriors lay on their backward trail, and the rifle-crack of their would-be victims hurried them on their way far into their mountain strongholds.

In the summer of 1756 the Indians again appeared in this township and committed, in cold blood, cruel and deliberate murder, and we copy from the newspapers of the day the following: "On the 8th of June, in the afternoon between three and four o'clock, four or five Indians made an incursion at a place called 'The Hole,' where the Great Swatara runs through the Blue Mountain—they crept up unobserved behind the fence of Felix Wuench, shot him as he was ploughing through the breast—he cried lamentably and run, but the Indians soon came up with him; he defended himself some time with his whip—they cut his head and breast with their tomahawks, and scalped him. His wife heard his cries and the report of two guns—ran out of the house, but was soon taken by the enemy, who carried her, with one of her own and two of her sister's children, away with them after setting the house on fire and otherwise destroying property.

"A servant-boy, who was at some distance, seeing this, ran to his neighbor, George Miess; though he had a bad leg, with his son he ran directly after the Indians, and raised a great noise, which so frightened the Indians that they immediately took to their heels, and in their flight left a tub of butter and a side of bacon behind them. Mr. Miess then went to the house, which was in flames, and threw down the fences, in order to save the barn. The Indians had drunk all the cider in the spring-house, and took several gammons, a quantity of meal, some loaves of bread, and a great many other things with them. Had Mr. Miess not been so courageous, they probably would have attacked another house. They shot one of the horses in the plough, and dropped a large French knife.

"Shortly after committing the above-mentioned murder, the Indians killed a child of Lawrence Dippel's. The child was found cruelly mutilated and scalped,—a boy about four years old. Another lad about six years old was carried off."

On the 26th of June, 1756, the Indians killed four persons, scalped them, and shot two horses. Two men, Franz Albert and Jacob Hantsche, and two lads, Frederick Weiser and John George Miess, ploughing in the field of one Fischer, were surprised, murdered, and scalped by the Indians, as appears from an extract taken from the Schwatzarer Kirchen-Buch:

"In dem Wilden Krieg sind folgende vier Brueder, Franz Albert, Jacob Hantsche, zwei Maenner; Friedrich Wieser und John George Miess, zwei Knaben, die in der Hohl welche, da sie daselbst auf des alten Fischer's Feld, um der Gefahr wegen gemeinschaftlich pflügten Nachmittags, den 26ten Juli, 1756, von den Wilden Indianern zugleich plötzlich ueberfallen, getoedet und gescalpt worden; und Sonstags den 27ten Juni, mit einer starken Bedeckung von Soldaten und anderer Mannschaft aus der Hohl gefahren, und mit einem starken Gefolg von etwa zwei hundert Menschen, unter Bruder Friedrich Schlegel's Liturgie, im Beysein des Bruder Samuel Herra, der auch zu der Zeit hier war, zugleich auf unser Gottes Acker, unter einem Gottesfrieden beerdigt worden."

Three miles northwest of Fredericksburg, near the residence of Joseph Shugar, are the remains of this old graveyard, attached to the Moravian meeting-house. The latter was a two-story log building, weather-boarded, lined on the inside with poplar, about thirty by forty feet, the first floor in three rooms or divisions, the second in one. The minister occupied the first floor as a residence and taught school during the winter season. The Rev. Höber preached there from 1800 to 1812. Rev. Frederick Loeffler, so eminently distinguished for learning and politeness, officiated there a long period. The old church was torn down about 1878. The Evangelical denomination erected a brick church near by the old site in 1860. The burying-ground is very much neglected, overgrown with weeds, and many of the headstones displaced, broken, and not legible. The stones to mark the graves of the slain were numbered, flat, about sixteen by twenty-four inches; but three of the seven could be found. It is probable, the accumulation of a century of leaf-mold has buried them from the sight of the casual observer. Those remaining are as follows :

The Franz Albert, who was also among the slain and whose grave we did not discover, was a native of Deux-Ponts, born July 20, 1719, a shoemaker by profession and came to this country when a young man, with other French Huguenots. Jacob Hantsch was a mason by trade and a young man of moral worth.

The last Indian murders in this township were the killing of Jacob and Hans Adam Mosser on Oct. 13, 1758. There were some others in their company who escaped and, being pursued, got into the house, the door of which the Indians endeavored to force open, when one of them was shot down by a boy, upon which the others wrapped him in a blanket and went off. In August, 1757, as John Winkleblech's two sons and Joseph Fischbach (a soldier in the pay of the Province) went out about sunrise to bring in the cows, they were fired upon by about fifteen Indians. The two lads were killed and one of them scalped, but the other got into the house before he died. The soldier was wounded in the hand. On the Grub estate is an old building which has loop-holes through which its occupants fired on the Indians in 1756-60. The farm of Henry Oberholtzer has been in his family over one hundred and ten years.

In October, 1756, as Jacob Farnwal was going from the house of Jacob Meylin to his own he was fired upon by two Indians and wounded, but escaped. As Frederick Henly and Peter Sample were carrying away their goods in wagons they were killed by the savages. In June, 1757, two men were murdered by the Indians, and a third shot in the hand. Three miles from Fort Smith was the old Sarge house, used in early days as a block-house. It has been torn down; but living persons testify to having seen the port-holes, and scores of partial perforations made in the logs by balls or bullets. On building the new house on its site the workmen discovered a subterranean cave, which served as a place of concealment and greater security for their wives and little ones should the block-house be surprised by the Indians in the absence of the men on their farms at work. Two brothers of that neighborhood, when plowing, were attacked and shot one dead, while the other made for the house and nearly reached his goal, and, while in the act of leaping a fence, an Indian in full pursuit sank his tomahawk into his victim's head.

The war upon the frontiers was a long and bloody one, and when the news came that Col. Bouquet had dictated terms to the perfidious Delawares and treacherous Shawanese at the Muskingum, there was great rejoicing in all the back settlements. Still greater was the joy when it was known that the captives who were in possession of the savages were all to be delivered up to their friends. It was on a wintry day, Dec. 31, 1764, when Col. Bouquet, having advertised for those who had lost children to come to Carlisle and reclaim them, brought out the little band of captives for recognition. Many had been captured when very young, and had grown up to boyhood and girlhood in the wigwam of the Indian, having learned the language of the savage and forgotten their own. One woman was unable to point out her daughter, and the captives could only talk in an unknown tongue. She told her sad lot to the kind-hearted colonel, who replied, "Do you recollect nothing by which your child might be discovered?" She said she recollected nothing but a hymn, which she used often to sing to her children, and which commenced as follows :

"Allein, und doch nicht ganz alleine,
Bin ich in meiner einsamkeit;
Dann wann ich gleich verlassen scheine
Vertreibt mir Jesus selbst die zeit;
Ich bin bey ihm, und er bey mir,
So konnst mir gar nichts einsam fuer,"¹

The colonel desired her to sing the hymn as she used to do. Scarcely had the mother sung two lines of it when poor Regina rushed from the crowd, ¹ A literal translation of this stanza is herewith given :

"Alone, yet not alone am I,
Though in this solitude so drear;
I feel my Saviour always nigh,
He comes my dreary hours to cheer;
I am with Him, and He with me,
Thus cannot solitary be."

began to sing it also, and threw herself into her mother's arms. They both wept for joy, and the colonel gave the daughter up to her mother. Regina subsequently married a Mr. Statler, and raised a large family of most respectable character. She died about the close of the year 1826, not far from Staystown, Somerset Co., Pa. One of their daughters became the wife of Peter Schell, of Bedford County, who were the parents of William P. Schell, late auditor-general of Pennsylvania.

In the days of the Revolution there were fears of Indian incursions, especially after the massacre of Wyoming; but the inhabitants mustered for their defense, as they had done two years before, when every other farm-house was a place of refuge and a fort.

We have no tax-list for the township anterior to the Revolution save the one given for 1751, nor during the war for independence, which would give the names of the non-associators. That for 1782 is full and complete. It will be seen that mills were owned by Casper Cohr, Philip Faber, Ulrick Knegy, Jacob Miley (2), Casper Steiver (2), making a total of seven. Stills were possessed by John Eissenhower, George Telty, Jacob Faher (2), Albert Kinefelder (2), Jacob Miley (2), Henry Meis, John Meis, Isaac Sneyly (2), Peter Smith (2), Casper Sherrick (2), Nicholas Souder (2), Jacob Wilt (2), John Wenger, Sr., and Adam Wilt, a total of twenty-two. No negro slaves were owned in the township.

Geo. Shefer.

About the year 1790 there flourished among the residents of Bethel township, on the borders of Berks County, a noted swindler named George Savin, alias Greene. He was a man of talent, possessed a winning address, and was a thorough master in quick and correct discernment of character, which enabled him for a long time to prey upon the purses of his credulous neighbors with impunity. The following extract from 2d Yeates' Reports will explain the character of his swindling operations:

"At Nisi Prius, at Harrisburg—October Assizes, 1798, before MESSRS. YEATES and SMITH, Justices. ABRAM STOUT against RANDOLPH RASSEL.

"Special action in the case. The plaintiff declared that whereas George Savin, alias Green, was indebted to him in £100, the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff promised to accept him as his debtor in the room of the said George Savin, alias Green, on the 2d of July, 1790, promised to pay him the said £100 within six weeks from that time or sooner, nevertheless, etc., non assumpsit. The evidence on the trial turned out as follows:

"Savin was an artful swindler, and gulled a number of ignorant persons to deliver him divers sums of gold and silver, under a pretence that he would double the amount by some chemical process in a short period. He first received, as if reluctantly, some small sums, and delivered to the adventurers in his bank (so called), a few days afterwards, genuine Spanish dollars, apparently new, doubling the sums paid him. When his fame was sufficiently known, and the avarice of the weak people in the neighborhood highly inflamed, he soon got into his custody considerable sums, and then decamped privately in the night from his haunt,—a retired place twelve miles from Reading, and concealed himself in Dauphin, now Lebanon County. To his latter hiding-place he was pursued by the plaintiff and one Francis Umbecker, two of his dupes, who offered a reward for apprehending him. The person whom they made use of for this purpose ingeniously held out to the defendant the lure of having £200 in specie at home, ready to be put into Savin's bank, if he should come to his house and receive it for multiplication. Some strong suspicious circumstances were shown against the defendant as being in connection with Savin. The latter first came to the house, in pursuance of the scheme, about ten o'clock at night of the 2d of July, 1790. The plaintiff and Umbecker lay concealed in the barn, and were notified of Savin's presence. On their appearance Savin was alarmed, and desired them to walk upstairs with him. On a signal given the defendant also appeared, and some altercation occurred; but afterwards, on being informed of their respective demands, he became security for Savin's appearance at his house the next morning before day. Thither they all came on the 3d of July, 1790, and defendant promised to pay the plaintiff his demand against Savin, £100, within six weeks from that time, or sooner; and as Savin owed to Umbecker, $303.11, to pay him $100 down, and the residue on the Tuesday following, at the same house in Dauphin County. Whereupon Savin was set at liberty. Verdict pro quer for £149 17s. 6d. damages. Messrs. Clymer and Reed pro quer, Messrs. Ingersoll, Hopkins, and Fisher pro def. A motion was afterwards made for a new trial, and a rule to show cause obtained; but the argument coming on in December term, 1799, the defendant's counsel discharged the rule."

FREDERICKSBURG.

Fredericksburg was laid out in 1754 by Frederick Stump, whose father, Christopher Stump, took up land in that locality at a very early date. It was called by him "Nassau," but in all the references thereto, even the early assessment-lists, it is designated as Stump's Town. The lots were sold or leased on ground-rents, at least those held by Joseph Siman, who seems to have been in all manner of speculation, whether as an Indian trader or as an investor in real estate. It is probable Frederick Stump was either indebted to Siman for money borrowed, and took some of the lots of the new town in exchange, or it was a venture. Nevertheless, we find in our possession a paper indorsed "Stump's Town Rent Roll—names of persons due for ground rent from May, 1776, to 1781." The names are as follows, with date of commencement of rent:

John Gibe, 1776.	Widow Hunnberger, 1776.
Peter Shower, 1776.	Matthias Stout, 1776.
Charles Berick, 1776.	John Kitzmiller, 1776.
Widow Desh, 1776.	Albert Klinefelter, 1777.
John Emrich, 1776.	Henry Snebely, 1777.
Widow Hoffman, 1776.	Widow Eakler, 1777.
Jacob Downey, 1776.	Peter Mowrer, 1777.
Peter Deisinger, 1776.	Widow Firebach, 1777.
Barnard Hower, 1776.

In the return of taxables for 1781 for Bethel township we find Stump's Town separate, and the names are herewith given. A remarkable fact connected with the return is that every person in Stump's Town owned one cow, and some two and three.

Concerning the founder of the town many stories have been told, and if ever there was a case of mistaken identity it was that of the founder of Fredericksburg and a Frederick Stump who was one of the participants in the atrocious murder of several Indians near Carlisle, at the close of the French and Indian war. That Frederick Stump fled to Virginia and was never heard of. Our Frederick Stump was pursuing his avocation as an industrious farmer and as an enterprising citizen, dying prior to the Revolution in Lebanon County, and, by reference to our genealogical register, leaving descendants honored and respected in different sections of the Union. It is the duty of a faithful chronicler to correct the errors which tradition has interwoven into the history of the past, and however exciting or tragical the story, if devoid of truth, should be expunged from the record.

In 1826, when the post-office was established there, it was named Stumpstown, and so continued until 1843, when the post-office department, at the request and on the petition of its citizens, changed it to Fredericksburg.

In 1782 the town contained about twenty houses. In 1827 it was almost wholly destroyed by fire. It is built mostly on Main or Market Street, a quarter of a mile in length, running east and west, in the centre of which there is a small square or market-place. Centre, Mechanic, and Pinegrove Streets cross Market Street at right angles. At the southwest corner of Market and Pinegrove Streets is a large plot of ground, surrounded on two sides by horse-chestnut trees with whitewashed trunks, owned by John H. Lick. About midway, and on the north side of Market Square, stands a two-story, red frame house, somewhat rickety with age, in which John Lick, father of James Lick, the California millionaire, kept a hotel over fifty years ago. Against the small glass window over the front door is "J. Lick," formed of rudely-carved letters. Half a square east of the "Lick Hotel," on the same side of the street, stands a recently-built two-story brick building, on the site of the house in which the mother of James Lick died in 1812. The old house was burned in the great conflagration of 1827.

In 1828, Henry and Martin Meily, brothers, built here, on the Reformed and Lutheran Cemetery lot, the first boat that was used on the Union Canal. It was called the "Columbus," and was hauled by wagons to Jonestown. On a corner of this lot stood the first school-house.

In 1883 the town has a population of nearly seven hundred, and is one of the most flourishing villages in the county. It is surrounded by a rich farming country, where may be seen magnificent farms dotted over with large Swiss barns, substantial dwellings, and every evidence of industry and prosperity. The brothers John and E. Grove, who own one of the largest iron establishments in Pennsylvania at Danville, are natives of this town, and possess near to it some seven hundred acres of the best land in the Lebanon Valley.

Since the establishment of the post-office the postmasters here have been, first, Dr. Amos L. Shannon, followed successively by Jacob Rudy, David Feehrer, Daniel Spangler, Christian Long, William Sarge, Levi Bichel, John H. Lick, William H. Gilbach, John Paine, Samuel Weber, and the present incumbent, Levi Shiffler.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) was organized prior to 1774. The present brick edifice was built in 1828. It had been preceded on the same site by a log and frame structure successively. The Lutheran pastors up to 1820 were Rev. John Casper Stuerer, 1774-79; Rev. Emanuel Shult, 1779-83; Rev. Wilhelm Carp, 1783-99; Rev. George Lochman, 1799-1812; Rev. John Stine, 1812-19.

The Rev. John Gring, a native of Reading, became the Reformed pastor, and continued until 1873, when he resigned. He resides in the town, having spent threescore years in the ministry. The Sunday-school connected with the church was established. Suprintendents, Henry S. Byerle, Daniel Brua; Treasurer and Librarian, John H. Lick; Teachers, Daniel Weber, David Feehrer, Levi Bickel, John P. Grumbine, Jacob Weber, Elizabeth Gring, Elizabeth Hoffa, Mary Weber, Elizabeth Weber, Mary E. Wendlegliver, Mrs. Susanna Bickel. Its library was a donation from the American Sunday-School Union of Philadelphia. It started with one hundred and twenty-five scholars.

The following are the earliest baptisms in the church records, those for 1774:

- April 20. Elizabeth, daughter of Michael and Margaret Wolfe.
 April 20. Anna Margaret, daughter of Adam and Anna Maria Sattel-zum.
 May 15. John Jacob, son of John Adam Grumlich and his wife, Anna Maria.
 May 15. Christina, daughter of John Henry Bucher and his wife, Barbara.
 May 15. Andreas, son of Sebastian and Margaret Wolfe.
 Aug. 17. Margaret, daughter of Jacob and Margaret Hauser.
 Aug. 17. Susanna, daughter of Jacob and Margaret Biny.
 Sept. 7. Michael, son of Daniel and Anna Maria Bashar.
 Oct. 5. Margaret, daughter of John George and Eva Moyer.
 Oct. 5. John Michael, son of John Michael and Esther Eisenhauer.

The first public school of which there is record established at Fredericksburg was shortly after the organization of St. John's congregation, and located on the church ground. This school was taught for a number of years by a Mr. Mitchell, and was attended not only by the children of the church members, but by all the children in the community. Years later another building was erected, exclusively for school purposes, on the Grove estate. This school was supported by pro rata assessments on those who were able to pay, while the children of indigent parents were educated gratuitously. There were in addition quite a number of pay-schools opened in various parts of the township, which were generally kept in the dwelling of the teacher.

Other churches in the town are the following. Efforts were made to secure fuller data, with a record of the ministers, but these failed:

THE BETHEL CHURCH, Church of God, is a plain brick structure on Market Street.

THE UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH is situated on the corner of Walnut and Centre Streets, and is a neat frame edifice.

THE SALEM EVANGELICAL CHURCH is a one-story brick building on Centre Street, erected in 1875.

The principal churches in the township, outside of the villages, are:

KLOPP'S CHURCH, Lutheran and Reformed, three miles east of Fredericksburg.

THE MENNONITE MEETING-HOUSE is a short distance from Fredericksburg.

UNION MEETING-HOUSE is situated two miles southeast of Fredericksburg.

THE MORAVIAN CHURCH OF BETHEL is referred to in the township history relating to the provincial era. The site of this old church is three miles northeast of Jonestown. In 1741, Count Zinzendorf arrived in America, and in August, 1742, visited the people at Tulpehocken. In 1743-44 he organized this congregation and church, then in Bethel township, of which Rev. Johannes Brandmüller was the first regular pastor, and at which Rev. Edward Leschey occasionally preached. From 1756 to 1763, during the Indian depredations, Rev. Frederick Schlegel was the pastor, who subsequently went to the Graceham (Maryland) Mission. About 1830 religious services ceased in the old church, and the remaining members attended Hebron Church, near Lebanon. A few years since the old building was removed, and near its site, thirty rods away, the United Brethren and Dunkards have built a union meeting-house. The Moravians abandoned the cemetery in 1833, but it is now used and kept up in good shape, with a neat fence around it, by the two congregations above mentioned, who bury their dead in its ancient and sacred inclosure. Most of the old tombstones are illegible, especially of those buried previous to 1770.

The following are the first thirty-one interments in this burying-ground, from 1752 to 1775, and are given in their consecutive order, each tombstone being numbered 1, 2, 3, etc., as obtained from the church records. Some of the tombstones are not to be found, the mold of a century burying them from sight:

1. Wilhelm Fischer, born Oct. 5, 1748, died Aug. 18, 1762.
2. David Fischer, born Sept. 21, 1769, died Sept. 29, 1782.
3. Michael Säussor, died Aug. 18, 1764.

The following four persons were murdered by the Indians, while plowing in the field, on June 26, 1756:

4. Jacob Hündche, man grown, joined the church April 15, 1756.
5. Franz Albert, born Sept. 30, 1719.
6. Joan George Miess, born Sept. 28, 1739.
7. Friederick Weisser, born May 21, 1740.

They were buried the day following their massacre, and their funeral services were conducted by Rev. Frederick Schlegel, assisted by Rev. Samuel Herr, Moravian ministers.

8. Michael Kohr, died Oct. 8, 1760.
9. Barbara Kohr, born 1728, died Oct. 29, 1763.
10. Heinrich Christ, died Dec. 31, 1763, aged 4 years, 4 months.
11. Heinrich Redelmeyer, died Oct. 31, 1764, aged 11 years.
12. Elizabeth Faber, died July 3, 1765.
13. Frederick Adam Faber, born May 29, 1717, died Aug. 25, 1767.
14. Christina Redelmeyer, died April 25, 1768, born Oct. 22, 1765.
15. Jacob Stöhl, died May 7, 1768, with smallpox, aged 1 year.
16. Elenor Bäber, died June 26, 1769, aged 29 years.
17. John Christian Kohr, born Dec. 12, 1769, died May 29, 1770.
18. Anna M. Barn, died July 2, 1770, youngest daughter of Daniel and Margaret Born, aged 11 months, 3 days.
19. Magdalena Kohrin, born in Nassau in 1730, died Dec. 7, 1770.
20. Infant son of Christian Redelmeyer, died March 22, 1772.
21. Christian Orendorf, died April 16, 1772, aged 80 years.
22. Margaret Born, died July 5, 1772, aged 40 years.
23. Daniel Born, died Sept. 17, 1772, aged 5 months.
24. John, son of Carl Redelmeyer, died Dec. 24, 1772, aged 2 years.
25. Juliana, daughter of Carl Redelmeyer, died Jan. 2, 1773, aged 3 years.
26. Catherine Spittler, born Aug. 16, 1769, died March 14, 1773.
27. Elizabeth Faber, died Dec. 8, 1773, aged 50 years.
28. John George Miess, died April 20, 1774, aged 70 years.
29. Catharina Beck, died Nov. 27, 1774, aged 17 years.
30. Johan Philip Beck, died Feb. 21, 1775, aged 12 years.
31. Maria Barbara Beck, born Dec. 15, 1751, died March 13, 1775.

The following are among the old settlers buried from 1775 to 1833, when the Moravians abandoned the graveyard:

The last interment in these grounds by the Moravians was that of the remains of Johannes Kiefer, aged five years, seven months, and ten days, on Jan. 13, 1833.

SHEEKSVILLE is a small village on the Lebanon road, about one mile from Fredericksburg.

MOUNT ZION is a post-town on the road from Lebanon to Pinegrove, about five miles north of the former. It has two churches,—Glick's (Lutheran) and Mount Zion (Reformed).

HAMLIN is a post-office in the eastern part of the township, not far from the Bucks County line, and has a tri-weekly mail.

GREBLE post-office is at Albert's Mills, on the Swatara, near the Bucks County line.

MONROE FORGE is in the northern part of the township, but has not been in operation for many years. This property has been recently purchased by Col. John H. Lick, who is now adding to it very extensive improvements. Work is going on on its dams, which are being improved with both beauty and utility in view. There is a fine water-power here, and the eligibility of this famous site will probably cause a large woolen-mill to be erected. The valley in which it is located is a charming one,—a delightful resort for those wishing quiet and rest.

EAST HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

To come to a perfect understanding of the erection and organization of this township it is necessary to repeat what we have given in the history of Dauphin County :

At February sessions, 1736-37, a petition was presented to the court of Lancaster County stating that many of the inhabitants of Derry township, living on the northwest side of the Swatara Creek, labored under inconveniences by reason of the largeness of the township, and asking to be divided from the other part thereof, and that their bounds might be as follows: "To be divided on the west from Peshtank by Beaver Creek, from its mouth to the mountain; from Lebanon on the east and Derry on the south, by Swatara Creek from Beaver Creek mouth to the forks, and thence by the north branch thereof to the mountain; which was allowed by the court and ordered to be recorded, and that the said township be called Hanover." The boundaries of this township as originally laid out are all natural, and therefore cannot easily be mistaken, but there is an evident mistake in stating the petitioners to be inhabitants of Derry township, residing northwest of the Swatara Creek, and that their prayer was for a division of Derry township. A glance at the boundaries of Derry will show that there was no part of that township on the northwest side of Swatara Creek, and the division lines asked for and granted did not touch upon the territory at all. The mistake is not of any practical importance, but seems evident that the petition was from inhabitants of Peshtank, and for a division of that township. Hanover, as thus laid off, embraced parts of what was before Peshtank and Lebanon townships.

During the years 1768 to 1775 frequent efforts were made for a division of the township of Hanover, those in the east end favoring a division, those in the west end in opposition. The war of the Revolution opening, the question was not mooted until the efforts were being made for the erection of the new county of Dauphin. The matter was brought to the attention of the court at Lancaster at the February sessions, 1785, from which we take the following record :

"The court, taking into consideration the limits of the township of Hanover and great difficulties of the several officers therein in discharging their respective duties, on due consideration and advisement, do direct a division thereof by a small stream of water running through the same, which is called the West Branch of Priest's Run, and rises on the lands of Philip Rank, and from thence by the said stream or run of water until it empties itself into Swatara Creek at Michael Brown's mill; and do further denominate that division which is next to Jonestown by the name of East Hanover, and the other division thereof by the name of West Hanover."

The stream of water called Priest's Run in the foregoing record is not found by that name on Thomas Smith's map, nor is any one now living in that section of the county who knows of a stream by that name; but from the best information which has been obtained, that marked on Smith's map, and now generally known as Raccoon Creek, was the dividing line between East and West Hanover townships down to the year 1813, when Lebanon County was taken from Dauphin, the northwest line of which runs in the neighborhood of Raccoon Creek, and, indeed, the head of that creek is made one of the points of that line, and the running of that line so near the dividing line of East and West Hanover townships made it of but little practical importance where the separating line of the two townships was; it may, however, be assumed with reasonable certainty that Raccoon Creek was the line.

There is another question which it seems proper and in place here to refer to, it is as to the true boundary on the north of East and West Hanover townships. In point of what may be called practice, it seems those townships were held to extend to the Second Mountain at least from an early day. If the records are consulted it by no means is certain that the practice was in accordance with them, or that there was any authority, until a later day, for supposing those townships extended beyond the First Mountain, other than long usage. When the township of Paxtang was erected, in 1729, it extended "from Swatara Creek to Kohhtonting Hill, above Peter Allen's." Where Peter Allen's was, or whether the First Mountain of the range was the only one known by the name of "Kohhtonting," it is now impossible to know. The probability is that start from below and running up the river, if it had been intended to pass the First Mountain and adopt the Second, it would have been so stated; this, however, is but conjecture. The next matter of record bearing on the question occurs when Hanover township was erected in 1737. Beaver Creek, from its mouth to the mountain, was made the dividing line between Hanover and Peshtank. Beaver Creek had its source at the southern base of the First Mountain, and the division line was extended no farther. It should have been stated before, when referring to the boundaries of Peshtank, that when the "Kohhtonting Hill" was reached, the line ran eastward by the south side of said hill to the meridian of the mouth of Quitapahilla Creek. Again, in the year 1767, the court ordered the division line between Upper and Lower Paxtang townships to be made from "the mouth of Fishing Creek; thence along the top of Kittatinia Mountain, next to Lower Paxtang, to Beaver Creek." Hanover township was divided into east and west in the year 1785; the dividing line was a run, having its source on the south side of the First Mountain. In this case, like that of the division of Peshtank and Hanover, the record provides no line extending beyond the First Mountain. The practice of treating the territory between the First and Second Mountains as within the Hanovers probably originated soon after the organization of Dauphin County, in the year 1785. The question whether East Hanover township extended beyond the First Mountain in the year 1796 occurred in the trial of the case of Gloninger vs. Goddard, in the Common Pleas of Lebanon County, and which is reported in 5th Watts, 221. The understanding and practice before mentioned was fully proved on that trial; in the Supreme Court, however, although it was not thought necessary to the question, the judge who delivered the opinion of the court clearly intimated that the records showed the First Mountain to be the true boundary. This question and these matters relating to it are here merely referred to as a part of the history of township boundaries, and not to be understood as suggesting any existing difficulty; incidentally the Second Mountain has become the record line of West Hanover, as may be seen on reference to the records establishing the township of Rush in 1820, and the division of West Hanover township in 1842, both in Dauphin County.

Upon the formation of the county, in 1813, East Hanover was included within the limits of Lebanon, and made East Hanover township, a part, however, being taken off at that time to form Swatara, and since further reduced by the formation of the townships of Union and Cold Spring. As at present, the township is bounded on the north by Cold Spring township, on the east by Union, on the south by North Annville and Londonderry, and on the west by Dauphin County. In the upper part of the township are the Blue Mountains, but south of these the country is level or gently undulating. The soil is chiefly slate and gravel, though there is some limestone land. Much of it is of excellent quality, and the township is one of the finest grain-growing districts of the county. The Swatara is the principal stream, and rises in Schuylkill County, on the south side of the Broad Mountain, and stealing its way through the Sharp and Second Mountains, enters the county on the northeast angle, through which, in its sinuous course, it receives the Quitapahilla, and other smaller tributaries; thence flows southward through Dauphin County, and empties into the Susquehanna River below Middletown.

The original settlers were Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, concerning whom we have previously referred at length. They were in truth an enterprising and daring race. There was, however, a fair sprinkling of the German element, as will be seen by the following

It will thus be seen that this section was thickly settled, and the pioneers had already made "the wilderness to blossom as the rose" when upon the defeat of Gen. Braddock's army the hostile savage broke through the barriers, and all unawares came swooping down like birds of prey upon the exposed settlements. Directly under the shadow of the Blue Mountain, they were on the farthest frontier, and so desolation and destruction marked the path of the red savage. The latter came upon the settlers so unexpectedly that they had scarcely time to gather for the defense of their homes.

On the 12th of October, 1756, ten Indians came on Noah Frederick while plowing, killed and scalped him, and carried away three of his children that were with him, the eldest but nine years old. May 2, 1757, the house of Isaac Sneyvel was set on fire and entirely consumed, with eighteen horses and cows. On Aug. 8, 1757, George Mauerer, while cutting oats in George Scheffer's field, was killed and scalped. At this time was such severe sickness in the township—the like had not been known—that many families could neither fight nor run away, which occasioned great distress. Had it not been for forty men which the Province had in pay, and stationed in the township, little of the harvest of that year could have been saved. On Aug. 18, 1757, James Mackay was murdered, and William and John Barnett wounded. On the same day there were taken prisoners a son of James Mackay, a son of Joseph Barnett, Elizabeth Dickey and her child, and ninety-four men, women, and children were seen flying from their places in one body, and a great many more in small parties. John Andrew's wife, going to a neighbor's house, was surprised by six Indians, had her horse shot under her, and she and her child were carried off. Near Benjamin Clark's house, four miles from the mill, two Indians surprised Isaac Williams' wife and the widow of Abraham Williams, who was a daughter of Thomas Smiley, killed and scalped the former in sight of the house, she having run a little way after three balls had been shot through her body; the latter being taken prisoner. On the 1st of October of the same year, the children of Peter Wampler were captured, and on the 25th of November, Thomas Robinson and the son of Thomas Bell were killed and scalped. May 22, 1758, the savages killed and scalped Barnabas Tolon. These depredations continued until December, 1763, when the murderous savages were seen for the last time within the limits of the township.

We have in our possession subsequent assessment-lists, being those for 1770, 1772, and 1773. As in the case with those given, there are those included who really belong to what is now Dauphin County, and it is no easy task to separate them. We therefore present the return for 1770, following it by the additions for the other years.

In the war for independence the inhabitants of this section of the county were especially patriotic, as will be seen by reference to the chapter of general history relating thereto. The events which followed were closely identified with the county proper.

In early times schools were not plentiful, yet not only the Scotch-Irish but the German-Swiss emigrants brought their teachers with them. The majority could write their names, the Bible and prayer-book of the Germans and the catechism of the Scotch-Irish could be read by all. It was a part of their religious teaching, and men and women were rarely seen who were unable to do this. We have examined the petitions and documents, containing in the aggregate thousands of names of early settlers, and there were few who made their mark. It is true, in the changes which took place in the township few traces are left of early schools, but from old account-books and receipts we find charges made for teaching the children.

The Lutheran and Reformed people, when they organized congregations, established a parochial school. This was altogether German, at first taught by a Mr. Gilbert, subsequently by a Mr. Mohler. The latter induced the congregation to allow him to teach English to such of the pupils as desired to acquire a knowledge of this branch. This school was continued until it gave way to the common schools. Gen. John Harrison, it is stated, who had a large fulling-mill on Indian Creek, established a school for the children of the workmen employed in his factory and others in the neighborhood who wished to attend. This school was a successful one, composed of English-speaking pupils and taught by the best teaching material in the country. Among others, the school was taught by Messrs. Baker, Canon, Kennedy, and Jamison. Another school early organized in the township was Harper's school, established by the family of that name. It, too, proved highly successful, and was equal to the schools of the present day.

In 1816, shortly after the formation of the county of Lebanon, we have the first record of the inhabitants of the township.

MOUNT NEBO is a thriving village near the eastern border of the township, on the road from Jonestown to Harrisburg, three miles from the former. It was never regularly laid out, but began to be built up in 1850. The land on its site was owned by Joseph Walter, John Seltzer, and Dr. D. S. Cooper. The first house was erected in 1846 by Frederick Sager. The first store was opened by Jacob Seltzer, who was succeeded by John Seltzer. The place was so named, by Judge William Rank and Dr. D. S. Cooper, Mount Nebo, from the Scriptural name, on account of its high position on a hill. When the post-office was established in 1851, and John Seltzer appointed postmaster, the Department called the office Seltzerville. A year or two later, when Milton Cooper was appointed postmaster, the name of the office was changed at the suggestion of Judge Rank and Dr. Cooper to "Ono," likewise a Scriptural name, which it still bears. Milton Cooper kept the office some six years, and his successors have been Michael Harning and Mrs. Jacob B. Meily, the latter the present incumbent. The first physician here was Dr. D. S. Cooper, who came from Leligh County and located here in 1839, before a town was thought of. He practiced for over thirty years in this region, and now resides in Jonestown. He is the oldest physician in the county. His successors have been Drs. William Henderson, Kreider, Grumbine, Benjamin Lesler, William Holtzberg, and A. S. Reiter, the present resident practitioner. The first blacksmith in the place was Jacob Stauffer, whose shop was at his tavern, and the next and present one was Alexander Hetrick.

UNION CHURCH of United Brethren in Christ is a one-story brick edifice erected in 1850. The present pastor is Rev. Benjamin Keck, who has been stationed there since 1878, his other charges being Union Water-Works, Mount Zion (Kaufman's Church), Bellevue, and Emanuel (Lemberger's Church). In the burying-ground attached to the church the following persons are interred:

Bixler, Jonathan, b. Feb. 22, 1834; d. June 17, 1850.

EAST HANOVER POST-OFFICE, near the junction of Swatara and Indiantown Creeks, was originally called Harper's Tavern, and latterly Gerberichville. Adam Harper settled here prior to 1740, when he built a log house. He kept the first public-house in all this region. The place is still known as Harper's Tavern, on the Harrisburg and Jonestown road, but the post-office is named East Hanover. Near Adam Harper's house, not half a mile distant, in 1756, the Indians killed six persons. One woman, a sister of Maj. Leidig, was scalped by the Indians and left for dead, but she eventually recovered, and lived many years afterwards. The first settlers here were Adam Harper, the Alberts, Uhrichs, Gerberichs, Leidigs, Weises, Wagners, etc. Adam Weis, an associate judge of the county, lived here and had a large tannery. The large wooden bridge over the Swatara was built in 1863, and took the place of the first one, erected in 1825. "Harper's Tavern" is thirteen miles northwest of Lebanon.

ZION'S LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CHURCH is located just west of "Harper's Tavern," a distance of about two miles. It was erected in 1848. In the graveyard adjoining, the following were interred:

SHERK'S MEETING-HOUSE, United Brethren, is two and a half miles southwest of "Harper's Tavern," in a region early settled by the Dohners, Zeiglers, Millers, Peiffers, Schulers, Moyers, Hains, Getzes, and Galebachs.

SWATARA TOWNSHIP.

THE township of Swatara was formed in 1813 upon the erection of the county of Lebanon. The section now included within its limits originally belonged to East Hanover and Bethel townships. The name is derived from the stream which forms most of its western border, separating it from Union township. It is bounded on the north and west by Union, on the east by Bethel township, on the south by North Lebanon township, and southwest by North Annville. In the northern part are two ranges of hills belonging to the Blue Mountains. Between these is Monroe Valley, extending into Bethel township. The southern part along the Black-oak Hills is also hilly, but the centre is level. There is some limestone land, although the soil is principally slate and gravel. However, the greater portion is fertile and highly improved. By the Swatara Creek which flows around it on the north and west, and the Little Swatara which crosses it from east to west, entering it from Bethel, and flowing into the former stream, with a number of smaller creeks, the country is well watered, and an abundance of water-power supplied.

It may be here stated that the Indian name SWATARA, which is a corruption from Swahadowry, means "where we fed on eels," or the place of eels. When this section was first settled, the Swatara was considered one of the richest waters for fish for its size in the Province of Pennsylvania. Fish of all sorts were exceedingly abundant. Even as late as from 1804 to 1807, five hundred shad were taken at one time, at the junction of the Swatara, with a common brush net. But with the erection of the numerous mill and other dams on the stream from its mouth up, and those on the Susquehanna, the fish have disappeared, and all the artificial contrivances in the world will not restore to Pennsylvania her fisheries on the Susquehanna and its branches until every obstacle and barrier in the shape of dams are torn down and removed.

For names of early settlers reference must be made to the original township of Bethel, of which Swatara was an integral part.

Two miles above where was formerly the Big Dam, in Swatara Gap, near the public road, is a beautiful cascade, unsurpassed by any in the interior of the State. Four miles north of the cascade, on the summit of Sharp Mountain, is a prominent ledge of rock projections, resembling very strikingly at a distance a group of houses, and from the top of one of them is had a view of the Susquehanna and Swatara Gaps, where these streams, the former in its majesty rolls its way, and the latter sinuously steals through an opening in the Blue Mountain. Here the Indians were wont to build signal-fires on the hills, from which to Shamokin they had a regular path or trail.

Between the years 1750 and 1760 the Indians committed numerous depredations, and roving parties of them infested the borders of the county, the public roads, and all other places in which they found no resistance, so that the settlers in the township held out with uncommon patience, but were at last obliged to take refuge in the forts or at Lebanon. After the return of some of them to their clearings and farms a few were surprised by the Indians and cruelly murdered. On May 16, 1757, John Spittler was shot while putting up a pair of bars on the farm now owned by M. Light. The following touching the murder of Spittler, in Bethel township, by the Indians, is found in records of Old Hebron Church:

"1757, May den 16ten, wurde Johannes Spittler, Jr., ohn weit von seinem Hause, an der Schwatara, von moerderischen Indianern ueberfallen nnd ermordert. Er war im acht-und-dreisigsten Jahr seines Alters, und verziehenes Jahr, in April, an der Schwatara auf genommen. Seine nebel zugerichtete Leiche wurde den 17ten May hieher gebracht, und bei einer grossen Menge Lente begleitet auf unsern hiesigen Gottesacker beerdigt."

The house owned by D. Shugar, two miles north of Jonestown, was used many years as a block-house or stockade fort, a place of safety where the neighbors would go for shelter through the night and return to their farms in the morning. On April 7, 1757, two brothers named Snotterly were killed by the savages, and Michael Sauter, William Hart, and a widow-woman taken captives. On the 20th of June, 1758, a German was shot and scalped by the Indians, and the next day Samuel Robinson was shot, the latter living to get into a house, where he soon died. The grave where Philip Shetterly was buried, after being shot by an Indian in 1758, is now owned by Mr. Lentz.

During the French and Indian war in this and the adjoining townships, now in Lebanon County, one hundred and thirty-four persons perished, and thirty-three were carried away captives by the Indians. Some of the inhabitants of this township who were killed lie buried in the old Moravian burying-ground, near the Bethel meeting-house, three miles north of Jonestown, to which reference is made in the notice of Bethel township. Several small moss-covered marble headstones are the only remaining substantial evidence of the exact time of the occurrence. Four were once arranged in a row; now only three are left. Each had an inscription in German,— "Murdered by the Indians, July 26, 1756."

And here in this quiet, unpretentious place, thus designated in a secluded graveyard by the mountain side, away from the noise and confusion of the world, with wild-flowers and grass growing round about nursed alone by the winds and the rain, by the sunshine and the frost in the onward course of the seasons, the bones of these bold German pioneers, long ago turned to ashes, have that absolute rest which their souls sought in their hopeful pilgrimage across the sea.

JONESTOWN.

ABOUT the year 1761, William Jones laid out a town in the forks of the Swatara, which he named Williamsburg. It was on the main road from the Delaware to the Susquehanna, from Easton to Harris' Ferry. The name was subsequently changed to Jonestown, but not until after the death of the founder, in 1771. The town is located twenty-four miles east of Harrisburg, and five miles north of Lebanon, on elevated ground, affording a picturesque view of the country. Lots in the new town were sold by the proprietor with the provision that purchasers or their assigns "shall make, erect and build upon said lot or lots one substantial dwelling-house, of the dimensions of twenty feet by sixteen at least, with a good chimney of brick or stone, to be laid in or built with lime and sand, to be finished and tenanted on or before the 20th day of October, 1762." The yearly quit-rent of lots of one-half acre was seven shillings and sixpence sterling. The precaution as to the material used in building the chimney was necessary, as the general practice was to make chimneys of slabs of wood daubed over, both inside and out, with mortar made of clay. For pleasantness of situation and salubrious air it cannot be surpassed, hence it was early settled by thrifty Germans, whose descendants to this day constitute the bulk of its enterprising population. Situated on very high ground, it commands a prominent eminence, and has wide streets, intersecting at right angles. It is not alone the eligible site that gave rise and progress to this town. What most contributed was the navigation of the Swatara River, on which, from the time of the original settlements made here, and especially from the time the town was laid out, a vast quantity of lumber of all kinds, boards and other building materials, were brought to it in rafts, floated down the Swatara in the spring, and in the fall freshets of the year. This raft navigation was carried on until August, 1826, when the last rafts were landed. A stop was then put to it, in consequence of the Union Canal Company erecting a dam in the Swatara Gap, to the height of forty-five feet. This dam inundated over eight hundred acres of land. It was constructed to serve as a reservoir to feed the canal, and also to answer as a slack-water navigation, for the distance of six miles, towards Pine Grove and the coal region. In the first settlement lumber and building materials were floated down the Swatara to Jonestown, and after 1826, and until 1862, were brought up in boats, on the canal, from Middletown. The lumber brought here formerly supplied all Tulpehocken and the Mühlbach settlement. The breaking of the dam in 1862 temporarily destroyed the canal, besides causing loss of life and destruction of property.

The Lebanon and Tremont Railroad passes by the town and follows the Big Swatara to Pine Grove. The road leading from Harrisburg to Reading and Easton passes through the town, which is thirty-one miles from Reading, and eighty from Easton.

One mile south of the town is "Bunker Hill," a lofty eminence, and the highest point of the trap-rock hills. In pre-historic days Bunker Hill must have been a great place of resort for the Indians, on account of the commanding view of the country afforded them on either side of the hills. Hundreds of arrow-heads are still found here, as well as other relics of the aborigines.

In the Bethel assessment for 1781, Jonestown is thus designated and its inhabitants are given separate as follows:

hill, about a quarter of a mile from the centre of the borough of Jonestown, and commanding from the tower summit a noble view of the whole country east and west as far as the Schuylkill and Susquehanna Rivers. The edifice is built in the shape of the letter L, with a frontage of about fifty feet and greatest depth of eighty feet. Heated by steam, lighted with gas, fitted with water and bath-room, etc., supplied with a fine-toned tower-bell, with twenty-five rooms comfortably furnished throughout, and two large play-grounds, this home of the friendless has all the appliances to fulfill its noble purposes. The institution was opened by Right Rev. Dr. Howe, of Reading, bishop of the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, in Christmas week 1881, and has now twenty-five children as inmates. For the present both sexes are received at from five to ten years of age, and will be retained till of an age and education fit to care for themselves. Children of parentage of any nationality, color, or religion are received, the only claim required being need and friendliness. The acting warden of the institution is the Rev. C. Hare, and resident at the home, the Rev. A. M. Abel, chaplain, and Miss A. Conklin, matron, are the officers' in charge, with one teacher, Miss Pendleton. The local treasurer is J. G. Heilman, of Jonestown. For its annual support the institution is dependent upon the alms of those liberally disposed, and its expenses run at the rate of about two thousand five hundred dollars a year. So soon as the bishop has thoroughly planted the orphanage and got it firmly established, it will be passed over into the hands of the diocese, with incorporated trustees and an executive committee, in the hope that it may become a permanent eleemosynary institution for generations to come.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The records at hand show that Rev. J. C. Stoever was the first minister to look to the wants of the scattered Lutherans in this section of country. He labored as early as 1733 at "Berg Kirche" (Hill Church), a few miles northwest of Lebanon. He cared also for the Lutherans who worshiped in a church south of Lebanon, many of whom subsequently formed Salem's Lutheran Church in Lebanon. He also labored at Reith's Church, below Stouchsburg, Berks Co., as early as 1733. He was pastor in Lancaster for four years. He labored some years in Virginia. He afterwards returned to Lebanon County; and at the meeting of the Synod, in 1763, was present, and reported as "Pastor Stoever von Swatara." He labored for a long time in Lebanon County. He died while pastor of Hill Church, May 13, 1779, aged seventy-one years, four months, twenty-two days. His remains were buried at Hill Church. Pastor Stoever ministered to the Lutherans in this vicinity. The Lutherans here most likely first worshiped in the "Swatara Kirche," a few miles east of Jonestown, on the line of the farms of Messrs. Zehring and Wengert, where of late years an old burial-ground was still found.

The first church in town, which was used by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations as early as 1764, stood on the old burial-ground south of Rank's and Seltzer's. In this church, Pastors J. C. Stoever, Frederick Theodore Melzheimer, and William Kurtz successively officiated. The first baptismal entries of Rev. Mr. Melzheimer were made about 1779. He may, however, have been pastor here before that time. The first baptismal entries of Rev. William Kurtz were made in the year 1787, who may have been pastor here earlier. He continued pastor until the time of his death, about the year 1799, and was buried on the burial-ground where the first church in town stood. During his ministry a new church was built but a short distance east of the church in which we meet to-day, on the burial-ground adjoining this church. The corner-stone was laid Sept. 4, 1792. Rev. Pastor Kurtz was assisted at the service by Rev. Emanuel Schultze, pastor at Tulpehocken, Rev. Mr. Wildbahn, of Reading, and Rev. Mr. Muhlenberg, of Lancaster. The building committee consisted of Messrs. Abraham Stein, Michael Stroh, Valentine Shaulflier, Frederick Boeshare, William Wood, and Geo. Heilman. The elders were Daniel Stroh and Michael Stroh, and the deacons were Geo. Heilman and Geo. Brost. The building was a large and substantial stone structure, with steeple for a bell. The interior wood-work was highly ornamental. The successor of Pastor Kurtz was the Rev. George Lochman, also pastor at Lebanon, who continued to serve the congregation until 1808 or 1809. The next pastor was the Rev. J. H. Vonhof, who commenced his labors on Nov. 26, 1809.

In the year 1810 an effort was made to secure a new organ, and that the effort was successful is evident from the account entered in the church record, from which it appears that a "Bachman Pipe Organ" was secured at an expense of eight hundred and eleven dollars and four and a half cents.

Before the year 1792 the congregation had contributed towards the purchase of a parsonage located at that time at Millerstown (now Annville). About the year 1795 the parsonage was sold for one hundred and seventy-five pounds sixteen shillings, and the congregation at Jonestown received as its share fifty-four pounds five shillings. This money was used in defraying in part the expense of building the new church. The congregation during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Vonhof, who resided at Jonestown, secured, about 1814, a building at Jonestown as a parsonage. In this purchase the congregation was aided by different country congregations connected with the pastoral charge. Rev. Mr. Vonhof continued as pastor until the year 1818, possibly the beginning of 1819.

Rev. John Stein became the pastor of Zion's Church, Jonestown, and other congregations of the charge in the year 1819. He commenced his labors at Jonestown June 20, 1819, and continued as pastor for about forty years. During this long ministry he was also at different periods pastor of Walmer's, Fredericksburg, Klopp's, Ziegel's, Schell's, Zion's, Monroe Valley, Bindnagle's, and Mount Etna.

The present church building was erected in 1853-54. Rev. Mr. Stein ended his pastorate with his death in 1859. His successor, Rev. William Gerhard (who was the first to introduce the English language in the service), labored from 1860 to 1865. In 1867, Rev. Mr. Schantz took charge and labored here in connection with Myerstown until January, 1881. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Mastens. The existence of the Reformed Church has been an uninterrupted one from the beginning, although it has like many similar organizations seen feeble as well as prosperous days. For many years, however, it has enjoyed abundant success. The present fine church edifice was erected in 1857.

In the graveyard attached to the church, on the corner of King and Market Streets, the following persons are interred:

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH.—The organization of the Jonestown Reformed Church is credibly supposed to date from 1740, although recorded evidence of the truth thereof is wanting. It is however within the province of documentary testimony to prove by a deed dated Sept. 20, 1765; William Jones transferred to Charles Shade, Wendel Hoyle, John Tibben, Theodore Younger, and Conrad Weise (trustees and wardens of the German Lutheran and "Presbyterian" congregations) a lot at Jonestown for the purpose of erecting thereupon a church. This building was located about two miles east of the village, and there also a burying-ground was laid out. As indicated in the deed for the lot, the church was used jointly by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations. Of the latter the first pastor doubtless was Rev. Conrad Templeman, famous in his day as a self-taught preacher and as a vigorous worker.

Alberthall, Balsar, b. Dec. 17, 1781; d. April 2, 1817.

ST. MARK'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH was organized on the 23d of March, 1876, by Rt. Rev. M. A. DeWolfe Howe, D.D., Bishop of Central Pennsylvania, the Rev. Alfred M. Abel, rector of St. Luke's Church, Lebanon, pastor, with regular services at Heilman Hall. The Rev. Mr. Abel was succeeded in April, 1878, by Rev. Chandler Hare, under whose charge the work at Jonestown fell. In 1878, Professor E. J. Koons was ordained a deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church, and took charge of the services. In September of that year the corner-stone of St. Mark's Church was laid, and on the 12th of November following the church was consecrated by Rt. Rev. Bishop Howe. The Rev. E. J. Koons remained in charge until Jan. 1, 1880, when the church remained without a settled rector until the 1st of October, 1881, when Rev. A. M. Abel was appointed to take charge of it.

THE JONESTOWN BANK was organized under the State banking law May 29, 1873, with a capital of $50,000. The first officers were William E. Bruner president, and Jerome W. Henry cashier. On the 1st of January, 1875, H. C. Phillips, the present cashier, was appointed. The directors are W. E. Bruner (president), Jeremiah Heilman, Christian Lentz, E. B. Seigrist, C. P. Miller, J. C. Seltzer, J. A. Heilman, D. M. Rank, John Phillips, and J. G. Heilman.

MOUNT ARARAT is a pleasant village in the southwestern part of the township, on the main road to Lebanon. It has two neat churches—Evangelical and United Brethren.

BUNKER HILL lies southwest of Jonestown, and has a post-office. Settlements were made here as early as 1730.

SALEM CHURCH (Union) lies two and a half miles north of Jonestown.

KREIDER'S MEETING-HOUSE is east of Jonestown, near the Bethel township line.

MONROE VALLEY MEETING-HOUSE is located in the Monroe Valley, in the extreme northern part of the township.

THE UNION SALEM CHURCH is located north of Jonestown, and is a neat one-story frame edifice, built in 1859.

UNION TOWNSHIP.

THE township of Union is bounded on the north by Cold Spring township, on the east by Schuylkill County and Bethel and Swatara townships, on the south by Swatara, and on the west by East Hanover.

On the 26th of September, 1842, on the petition of numerous inhabitants of East Hanover township for a division of said township and the erection of a new one, the court appointed John R. Breitenbach, Robert Kreider, and Henry Meily commissioners to run a line of division and make report at the next general Court of Quarter Sessions of their proceedings. The report was made, approved of by the court, and the division of East Hanover and erection of Union township directed as follows:

"The line of division begins at a point on the north bank of the Swatara Creek, opposite to Mish's mill in the road leading from said mill to Yerger's tavern; thence along said road and through lands of Michael Gingrich north 72° west (at two perches Gingrich's land off, and the land of the heirs of Jacob Titler in Union in) 14 perches to a hickory-tree; thence through the same north 13° , 49° west (at $30\frac{1}{2}$ perches the land of the heirs of Titler off and Henry Krall in Union district in) 45 perches; north $26\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 13 perches; thence north 20° west $9\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north $28\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 11 perches; thence north 30° west 20 perches; thence north $6\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 12 perches; thence north 7° east 7 perches; thence north $31\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 28 perches; thence north 74° west 16 perches; thence north 14° west $7\frac{3}{4}$ perches; thence north 10° east $10\frac{3}{4}$ perches; thence north 33° west 12 perches; thence north 5° west $13\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north 41° west $11\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north 50° west 12 perches; thence north 41° west $16\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north $53\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west $9\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north 71° west $9\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north 23° east 10 perches; thence north 45° east $14\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north $28\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ east 15 perches; thence north $24\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ east $9\frac{1}{2}$ perches to a chestnut-tree on the Second Blue Mountain; thence due north at 192 perches, line across Stony Creek which runs west at 212 perches, is located the tavern house at the Cold Spring 6 feet from the line leaving it in East Hanover 2 miles and 53 perches to a chestnut-oak-tree on the top of the Fourth Mountain intersecting the Lebanon and Dauphin Counties line. From a point on the line nearest the Cold Spring tavern the commissioners surveyed as follows, viz.: south 87° west $18\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence south 29° west $7\frac{1}{2}$ perches to the centre of the Springs, north $30\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west $17\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north $7\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 12 perches; thence north $33\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 14 perches; thence north $40\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ (at 31 perches line crosses Indian Town Creek) 32 perches; thence north 21° west 23 perches; thence north $43\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 14 perches to the forks of the road leading to the Cold Spring and Pine Grove; thence north $68\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 31 perches; thence south 80° west 24 perches; thence south 83° west 19 perches; thence south $86\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 40 perches; thence south $68\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 17 perches; thence south 72° west 19 perches; thence north $45\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west (at 34 perches the line crosses a branch of the Indian Town Creek running east) 43 perches; thence south 86° west 24 perches; thence north 69° west (at 13 perches Joseph's spring about 4 perches north of the line leaving it in Union) 17 perches; thence north 60° west 18 perches; thence north $65\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 38 perches; thence north $31\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 34 perches; thence north $14\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ east (at 24 perches the line crosses the road leading to Manada Furnace) 33 perches; thence north $\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 29 perches; thence north $15\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ east (leaving the house of Thomas Kuiser on Weidman's land in Union)

ion) $52\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence 1° east 36 perches; thence north $17\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 12 perches; thence north 31° west 32 perches, now ascending the Second Mountain; thence north 23° west 19 perches; thence house off and Philip Hess in East Hanover in leaving Hess' barn about 4 perches south of the line, at 1 mile and 70 perches, Hess off and Isaac Hetrich in East Hanover in, at 1 mile 250 perches, Hetrich off and Henry Garbach in Union in, at 2 miles 19 perches the line crosses Reed's Creek, at 2 miles $117\frac{1}{2}$ perches Garberich off and John Walmer (wagon-maker) in Union in, at 2 miles 194 perches Walmer off and Philip Garberich in East Hanover in, at 2 miles 224 perches the line crosses the road leading to Walmer's Church and again the line of John Walmer, at 3 miles Walmer off and John Garberich Adams, Sr., in East Hanover in, at 3 miles 70 perches the line crosses the State road from Harrisburg to Pine Grove about 12 perches from Garberich's house, at 3 miles 158 perches Garberich off and Henry Shuey (where Nicholas R. lives) in Union in, at 3 miles 228 perches the line crosses the road leading to Lyon Lemberger; thence through the land of Jacob B. Weidman (Walmer's place) in East Hanover in, 4 miles 200 perches to a stone heap, &c., on the land of Weidman intersecting the Cold Spring road near Frederick Trout's house; thence along the Cold Spring road north $57\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west (at 40 perches Trout's house in Union) $45\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north $27\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 26 perches; thence north $12\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west $10\frac{1}{2}$ perches; thence north 9° west 16 perches; thence by the same north 13° west 60 perches to a spring crosses the road about 8 perches south of Krall's house; thence by the same north $21\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 37 perches to a corner of John Daub and Henry Krall's lands, leaving Daub in East Hanover; thence on the line of Daub and Krall's lands north $14\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 32 perches; thence by the same north line $5\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 46 perches to a black-oak-tree; thence north $31\frac{1}{2}$ west 32 perches; thence through lands of Jacob Keiffer leaving Keiffer in Union north $53\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 35 perches; thence north 75° west 71 perches to line of Keiffer and William Reiter's land, leaving Reiter in East Hanover; thence along said line north $12\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west 61 perches to a corner of Reiter's, Keiffer's, and Philip Lerch's land leaving Lerch in East Hanover, here Reiter's land off and Lerch's in; thence on the line of Lerch's and Keiffer's land north $2\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ west to a stone in the great road leading from Harrisburg to Jonestown; thence to the Indiantown Gap and through the land of Henry Bross, leaving said Bross in Union north 1° west (at 138 perches Bross off and Philip Lerch in East Hanover in); at this place the line crosses Lerrick's road at 196 perches Lerrick's off and the lands of Jacob Rauch in Union in, at 260 perches crossing a spring west $\frac{1}{2}$ perch from Jonathan Anspach's house leaving Anspach in East Hanover, at 282 perches Anspach's."

That portion of the township which lay beyond the Second Mountain was in 1853 stricken off to form the

The first range of the Kittochtinnny or Blue Mountains crosses the upper portion of the township, making it rugged, but the southern part is level and fertile. The Swatara Creek bounds it on the east, separating it from Swatara township. The Big Dam, on the creek in Swatara Gap, extending into this and the latter townships and serving as a feeder to the Union Canal, broke in 1862, and has not since been repaired. The Swatara Feeder extended from this dam through the eastern part of the township to the Union Water-Works. The Lebanon and Tremont (Pine Grove) Railroad extends through the eastern part. About the middle of the eastern border of the township, on the Swatara Creek, is Union Forge. The soil is principally gravel and slate, with some limestone. The country is well watered by small streams, but, besides the Swatara, there are none of any considerable size. There are no towns in the township, but the country is well improved and has many excellent farms.

Fort Smith was located in this township and was built in 1738, three-quarters of a mile north of Union Forge. It was on land lately owned by Widow Elizabeth Shuey, but now by D. Blouch. It figured largely in the days of Indian alarms and massacres. The site of the land was originally owned by Peter Heydrich, who emigrated from Germany and located prior to 1738. In the Mount Pleasant district a Mr. Noacre was killed by the Indians while plowing in a field now owned by R. Boltz. Philip Maurer was also shot dead while cradling oats on the old John Gross farm. The house of Martin Hess was often a place of refuge, and was a mile southwest of Peter Heydrich's. Matthias Boeshore was also an old settler, who on one occasion retreated from the Indians towards Hess's house. Just as he had got inside the house he seized a gun, and, turning upon his pursuers, leveled his piece at them, and while in the act of drawing the trigger he received a shot from the Indians which wounded him but slightly. The bullet of one of the savages' guns struck that part of Boeshore's rifle to which the flint is attached, and the ball glancing a little to one side wounded him in the left side. He lived to be an old man and left a numerous offspring.

On the old Weidman farm was another block-house or place for refuge. It is related by Rupp that on frequent occasions, when the Indians appeared in numbers and his neighbors were in their own homes, Peter Heydrich gave immediate notice to the people to resort to the fort. At one time, it is related, he "took the fife and drum (of the fort) and marched himself into the woods or thicket, now beating the drum, then blowing the fife (and he could beat and fife well), then he would give the word of command loud and distinct, as if it had been given to a large force, though he was the only one to obey orders, and by this ruse de guerre he managed to scare the Indians away and collect his neighbors securely,—noth bricht Eisen."

Many incidents are related of pioneer times and of the hardships of the early settlers, which would no doubt prove interesting to the readers of this history, but the record of the domestic life of our ancestors must be reserved for a fireside history of that hardy and energetic race. Schools and churches were early established. These pioneers, who, in their youth, in the land of their nativity had enjoyed Christian instruction, were not slow, although situated in the wilderness, to give such facilities for the education of their children, not only as their means would allow but as opportunity afforded.

WALMER'S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) is located two miles northwest of Mount Nebo. The first edifice was a log structure built in 1770, and the second a frame, in 1810. The present church was erected in 1850. The old settlers of this vicinity were the Walmers, Gerberichs, Lights, Shueys, Klicks, Goods, Rabers, Brightbills, Shells, Elliots, and Fishers.

MOONSHINE'S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) is located near East Hanover township line, between the First and Second Mountains. The early settlers hereabouts were the Kohrs, Sticklers, Brosses, Werts, Brands, Trouts, and others.

SATTAZAHN'S CHURCH (Reformed and Lutheran) is situated near Wolf's tavern. The building is a one-story frame structure. The early settlers in this neighborhood were the Wolfs, Sattazahns, Stiners, Behneys, Ditzlers, Daubets, and Zechmans. In the old graveyard are buried,—

MURRAY and ISWOOD are stations within Union township, on the line of the Lebanon and Tremont Railroad.

UNION FORGE.—This place is on the eastern border of the township, on the Swatara Creek, and on the Lebanon and Tremont Railroad. It has a population of one hundred and fifty, an express and telegraph-office. The old forge here was erected about the beginning of the century, and is now operated by J. & R. Meily, in the manufacture of pig-iron. The stone flour-mill, run by Henry & Jack, was erected just after the completion of the railroad, and took the place of an old frame one. The latter and the forge were then owned and operated by Morris Weidman. The forge now gives employment to some forty hands.

COLD SPRING TOWNSHIP.

THE township of Cold Spring is bounded on the east by Schuylkill County, north and west by Dauphin County, and on the south by East Hanover and Union townships. It is so named from the large spring which furnishes the main supply for Stony Creek, and upon the organization of the county of Lebanon was not included within its bounds, as will be seen by reference thereto.

At the September sessions of court 1853, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of East Hanover and Union townships, for the erection of a new township (Cold Spring) out of the territory of said two townships, the court appointed John Early, Cyrus P. Miller, and William Lick commissioners to ascertain and designate the boundaries. Their report of Nov. 3, 1853, was as follows: "Beginning at a chestnut-tree, at or near the Dauphin and Lebanon County line, on the south side of the Second Blue Mountain in East Hanover township; thence through unimproved lands unknown the owners thereof, north 80° east 86 perches to a chestnut-oak-tree; thence same north 62° east 82 perches to a chestnut-oak-tree; same north 80° east 40 perches to a black-oak; same north 53° east 216 perches to a chestnut-oak; same north 64° east 42 perches to a chestnut-oak; same north 82° east 66 perches to a chestnut; same and John S. Moyer's unimproved lands north 70° east 180 perches to a chestnut-tree; thence through unimproved land of said John S. Moyer north 52° east 110 perches to a chestnut-tree back of a house now occupied by Henry Meer as a public inn or tavern; thence the same north 60° east 8 perches to a public road leading through Indiantown Gap to Cold Spring and the present township line between East Hanover and Union township; thence the same and the same course 116 perches to a black-oak; thence the same and lands the owners unknown 70° east 728 perches to a chestnut-tree, and in the said Union township through unimproved lands of the heirs of Henry Meilly, deceased, and Martin Moyer north 55° east 220 perches to a black-oak-tree; thence through unknown land north 47° east 14 perches to a hickory-tree, at or near the line of lands of the Susquehanna and Dauphin Coal Company's land; thence along the line of said company's land, through their lands and lands of Isaac Saddazahn north 60° east 750 perches to a white-oak-tree; thence through unimproved lands of the said Isaac Saddazahn and David Mees north 48° east 96 perches to a black-oak-tree north of the house of said David Meese; thence unimproved lands of the said David Meese and others north 59° east 148 perches to a post in a private road leading from the public-house of Amos Wolf to the Gold Mine Gap; thence along the said private road and unimproved land of David Hummel north 54° east 123 perches to a white-oak-tree on the lands of George Felty, and near the private road leading from a school-house to Gold Mine Gap; thence north 45° east 496 perches to a chestnut-tree, and through unimproved lands of George Felty, Heilman, Greiner, &c., and Eckert and Guilford to the Lebanon and Schuylkill County line."

The following were owners of taxable property in the township at the time of its formation. We omit the tenants, as the greater portion were temporary inhabitants,—miners and machinists:

Dauphin and Susquehanna Coal Company (Cold Spring tract), George Gardner, Adam Rapp, Peter Wengert, Andrew Eisenbiser (these four unseated lands), Leidig and Brechbill (Yellow Spring), same under title of Stony Creek Coal Estates, Adam Grouser, Henry Fleizer, Jacob Bright, Daub and Bohr (all four unseated lands), Conrad Moyer, Michael Moyer, Nicholas Sheaffer, Daniel Sheaffer, Catherine Koon (Gold Mineral Black Spring), Gabriel Hiester, Peter Nagle, Conrad Feager, Philip Kreamer (coal land), Conrad Koon (coal land), Daniel Linabach, John Rapp, Christian Koon, Presley Blackistone (tax titles), Martin Moyer (coal land), John Sheaffer (coal land), Elizabeth Koon (coal land), Peter Frailey, J. Shainfelder, H. Dickle, Michael Rapp, Frederick Rapp, Peter Rapp.

This township, as will be noted, lies in the extreme northwestern part of the county, between the Second and Fourth Mountain, the Third Mountain passing through its centre. Its erection grew out of the coal and lumber trade, which in 1853 had attracted considerable population, but the promise it then gave of continued prosperity has not been realized, the actual number of the inhabitants at present being much less than at the time of its formation. The soil of this mountain region is rocky and sterile, and but little of it under cultivation. At one time considerable quantities of timber were cut on the mountains, but the supply became exhausted in a great measure, and that business has declined. Some coal was found and several collieries opened, but the operations failed, owing to the poor quality of the coal mined.

Quite a village sprung up at Rausch Gap, where the Schuylkill and Susquehanna Railroad, which passes through Stony Creek Valley, erected a machine-shop, but the poorness of the soil and inferiority of the coal has checked its prosperity. There is no doubt, however, of good coal being contained within the mountains, which require only research, energy, and capital to develop.

Cold Spring, along the line of the railroad, has become quite a noted summer resort. As early as 1775 it was noted for the coldness of the water and for the beneficial results in rheumatism. It has been resorted to by invalids from that early period, although difficult of access owing to the badness of the mountain roads. The railroad, however, has brought it within easy reach, and recently every effort has been made to make it a desirable place for recreation and health.

HEIDELBERG TOWNSHIP.

THE Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, by an act passed March 11, 1752, erected the county of Berks, separating the new county on the southwest from Lancaster by the line which subsequently continued to be the dividing line between Dauphin and Berks Counties, and the same which at present divides Lebanon from Berks, and Dauphin from Schuylkill Counties. This line, as before stated, cut off a portion of Bethel township, and will be referred to hereafter in relation to the boundaries of townships. At the time the county of Berks was erected, the townships of Warwick, Heidelberg, and Cocalico had existence in Lancaster County; they either adjoined the south and east sides of Lebanon township or were located in that neighborhood. At February sessions, 1757, the inhabitants of the township of Heidelberg petitioned the court, stating their difficulties arising out of the largeness of their township, and that there was a considerable body of land lying between the townships of Heidelberg, Lebanon, Warwick, and Cocalico that had not before then been erected into or annexed to any township, and praying for a reconstruction of said townships; upon which the court ordered and designated the boundaries of several townships, among which was Heidelberg, as follows:

"Beginning at the south side of Joseph Cratzer's land, bounding upon Lebanon, and extending by the same northerly to Bethel township; thence easterly along Bethel to Tulpehocken township, in Berks County; thence by the same to Cocalico township, to Valentine Feeman's; thence by the same and by Elizabeth Feeman to the place of beginning." This gives the boundaries of Heidelberg township as they were when Dauphin County was subsequently taken from Lancaster, and as they remained so long as Heidelberg township was a portion of Dauphin County. Its limits, however, were subsequently reduced by taking away its northern section to form, with the southern part of Bethel, the new township of Jackson. Since then the greater portion of Mill Creek has been separated from it on the southeast. The country is comparatively level, except in its extreme southern border, where the South Mountain separates it from Lancaster County. The soil, as is the greater portion in the southern part of the county, is limestone of the best quality, and is well cultivated and improved. In its southern part are several streams, the largest of which, Hammer Creek, flows through a gap in the mountains to join the Conestoga in Lancaster County. The next stream in size is Mill Creek (Mühlbach), rising in the east and flowing northeast into the Tulpehocken. The northern part has no running streams, and the stock of farmers are watered in the pools of standing water abounding in this region.

The township was first settled by German Jews, who must have come here as early as 1720, as they had a church and cemetery. They were so numerous at one time as to have a synagogue, and a rabbi to read the Scriptures and impart to them other instruction. As early as 1732 they had a graveyard, around which a substantial stone wall was built, nearly the whole of which was standing until quite recently. The cement or mortar used was very adhesive, and was made of a larger proportion of lime than is now generally taken, for it is even now quite as compact and solid as limestone itself. It lies half a mile south of Shaefferstown, one hundred yards east from the Lancaster road. The cemetery is all that remains to show that these German Jews were once here, the synagogue having long since crumbled into dust; and, as the march of civilization surrounded them with a class of neighbors prejudiced against their religion, they disposed of their effects and went away.

These people were Germaus, the first of whom had either come directly from Germany, or from the Province of New York, where many of them arrived in 1710; thence they emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1723.

In 1724 the German Baptists, commonly known as Dunkards, commenced a settlement in this township as first organized. Many of these came from Germany and Holland in 1709, settled first at Germantown, and some years afterwards established a school and church at Mülhbach.

On the farm of S. Bomberger was erected, in 1723, a log fort, which was used by the settlers as a protection against the Indians, and near which several skirmishes occurred. Among the elements of natural wealth are the great deposits of brown sandstone in the southeastern part, much of which is on lands owned by William Weigley and Dr. Zerbe, and of which the former's elegant mansion is built.

This township suffered largely from Indian depredations. On July 8, 1757, between Valentine Herckeroad's and Tobias Bickel's four Indians killed two children and scalped a young woman about sixteen years of age. A woman was terribly cut with the tomahawk, from which she died, and three children carried off prisoners. Christian Shrenk's wife, being among the rest, bravely defended herself and children for a while, wresting the gun out of the Indian's hands who assaulted her, also his tomahawk, and threw them away. Two of her children were captured. In this house were about twenty women and children, who had fled from their own habitations to take shelter, and the men folks were half a mile away picking cherries. The latter came as quick as possible, and went in pursuit of the savages, but to no purpose, as the latter had concealed themselves.

There is nothing special which occurred during the French and Indian war or the war for independence save what has been already alluded to in the general history of the county. The list of officers for the township from 1759 to 1785 is herewith given :

The population of the township during the period of the Revolution did not increase rapidly. The war prevented emigration. The young men were in the army, but the following list of taxables for 1782 gives us the names of many old settlers who had come to America prior to 1775. In 1781 there were nine grist-mills, owned respectively by Thomas Bassler, Michael Miller (2), Rudy Mayer (2), John Salsgeber, Michael Shenck (2), and Michael Zeller. George Meiser owned the only saw-mill. Stills were possessed by Melebiur Laudermilch, Michael Miller, Peter Newman, Michael Neff, Henry Shaeffer, Philip Wolfersberger, and Peter Zeller. Negro slaves were owned by the widow of Isaac Meyer, Leonard Stump, Peter Sheetz, and Philip Wolfersberger.

On the night of the 28th of December, 1797, occurred the Sheetz murder, the first in the township and in the county of Dauphin, in which it then was Peter Sheetz, Sr., a well-to-do farmer residing near Shaefferstown, had three children,—Elizabeth (married John Hauer), Frantz or Francis, and Peter. The father died in 1795, leaving his daughter one thousand pounds Pennsylvania currency, and the balance of his property to his two sons. John Hauer, not being satisfied with the will, tried by law to make it void, and not successful in this, his hatred increased and he determined to work his brothers-in-law out of the way by giving them poison. In this he also failed. About this time two young Irishmen, Charles McManus and Patrick Donagan, came to this country, who, upon hearing of this dissatisfaction, and being determined to get rich in the shortest time possible by any means however foul, they planned to go with Hauer to the home of the Sheetz brothers and kill them there, believing Hauer would be hung for the crime, and that the widow would then inherit all, and finally result in Charles McManus marrying her. On the evening of the 28th of December, 1797, Hauer and the Irishmen met on horseback at or very near the spot where the recent murder, yet unsolved, of the late Joseph T. Miller, was committed, where they laid the plan, and from whence they started out to kill the Sheetz brothers. Francis Sheetz, with his brother Peter, had been that day at a vendue and returned home in the evening greatly fatigued. The former laid himself on a bench near the stove to rest, while the latter retired to bed in an adjoining apartment. They had not been long in this tranquillity before a female of the house discovered a light in the kitchen, and, opening the door, was frightened at the appearance of several men, and immediately endeavored to awaken Francis Sheetz, but she had only in part effected her purpose when one of the assassins presented a pistol at his head, which he discharged, and killed him on the spot. In the mean time two others proceeded to the bedroom of the brother, Peter Sheetz, with axes, and at the first stroke which one of them made his axe caught the cord of the curtain, which in some measure stopped the force of the blow. He was, however, very much cut on the shoulder, which caused him to leap from the bed to the floor and to have the presence of mind to seize a chair, with which he knocked them both down; but in leaving the room he received another deep wound on his posterior, which did not prevent him, however, from locking the door and escaping out of a window and retreating to a barn, where he placed himself in a narrow passage, armed with a pitchfork; but, after waiting a considerable time, and finding the murderers had gone, he repaired immediately to Shaefferstown and gave the alarm, and by the vigilance of the inhabitants the assassins were arrested. Peter Sheetz was only seventeen years old. The grand jury, at the June term of court, 1798, found true bills of indictment against Charles McManus and Peter McDonough as principals, and John Hauer, Elizabeth, his wife, Patrick Donagan, Francis Cox, and Hugh McDonough as accessories before the fact. On Wednesday, the 13th of June, 1798, Charles McManus was brought to his trial first, which continued nearly eight hours, when he was convicted, upon the fullest evidence, of murder in the first degree. On the Friday following a jury was sworn for the trial of John Hauer, Patrick Donagan, and Francis Cox, which trial continued until Sunday evening at half-past seven o'clock, when the jury, after having been out three and a half hours, returned with a verdict of guilty against John Hauer, but not guilty against Donagan and Cox. McManus and Hauer were sentenced by Judge Henry at ten o'clock next day.

The Oracle of Dauphin, of July 18, 1798, speaks of the execution as follows: "On Saturday, the 14th inst., were executed on the public ground (between the State arsenal and surveyor-general's office) John Hauer and Charles McManus, in pursuance of their sentence, for the murder of Francis Sheetz. The deportment of Hauer was much more decent and composed than was expected from his conduct since his trial and condemnation. Whether his dumbness was real or affected, he was at least consistent, and sustained the concluding scene without uttering a syllable. McManus, in his last moments, confirmed the testimony he had given to the grand jury, viz., that he was not in the house or present at the murder, but that he held a horse at the end of the lane in order to aid the escape of the perpetrators, who were Hauer and Hugh McDonough. He appeared with the same manly and even cheerful resignation which he had invariably preserved during his trial and imprisonment, and which, added to his youth, had, notwithstanding the atrocity of his crime, procured him no inconsiderable degree of public sympathy and favor."

After the execution "the high sheriff of Dauphin County" published a card returning "his thanks to the inhabitants of the borough and particularly to the officers of the several corps of volunteers and militia for their indefatigable care in guarding the public jail for many months past, and for their attendance and good order on the day of the execution of the two late unhappy criminals." The "guarding the public jail," alluded to by the sheriff, was rendered necessary in consequence of several attempts having been made by the prisoners to escape. Hauer's remains were taken possession of by his wife, brought home, and buried on the farm. The exact place of burial is not known; but it is only a short distance from the State road leading to Lebanon and almost adjoining Shaefferstown.

A history of Heidelberg township cannot be complete without a passing reference to a distinguished character in ante-Revolutionary days,—Baron Steigel. In our biographical history will be found a sketch of the baron. Hard by Shaefferstown, near the road to Lancaster, is Tower Hill (Thürm Berg), where he erected a tower or castle, the ruins of which have long since disappeared. Much of his life was spent in this quiet retreat, as Elizabeth Furnace, which he owned, was not far off. Steigel owned one-third (the Stedmans having the remainder) of five hundred and fifty acres in Heidelberg and Elizabeth townships; of one hundred and thirty-eight acres in Lebanon township, known as the iron-mine, adjoining land of Conrad Templeman and Henry Heiser; one hundred and forty acres in Heidelberg township, adjoining lands of Michael Neff and Michael Brecht, bought of John Endress; and twelve hundred acres in Lebanon and Warwick townships. He also owned half of four hundred acres in Heidelberg and Tulpehocken townships, two hundred acres woodland in Heidelberg, and eighteen hundred acres in Bethel township. These were in addition to his Berks and Lancaster County lands.

SHAFFERSTOWN.

We have referred in the history of the township of Heidelberg to the early settlement of German Jews at or near Shaefferstown. This enterprising and pleasant village is located centrally in the present Heidelberg township, and antedates the other towns of the county in its settlement and laying out. To Alexander Shaeffer, a religious refugee from the Palatinate, are we indebted for the founding of the town which bears his name, although Heidelberg was the title given it in all deeds of conveyance up to the time of his death. Alexander Shaeffer had at first settled at or near the mountain, to the southwest of the town.

That part of the South Mountain still retains the local name of "Schwoben Berg," Anglice, "Suabian Hill," where Shaeffer's wife, Anna Engle, first saw the advantages of settling on the fair and fertile lands that lay near the foot of the mountain. She induced her husband to remove from the bleak and unpropitious mountain-side to the inviting plain that was stretched out beneath them. Whereupon Shaeffer obtained possession by purchase from the heirs of Martin Thomas of all the lands now covered by the town, as well as a considerable part of those lying in its immediate vicinity. It was laid out by him in

1744 after a plan which has not since been materially deviated from. In what was designed to be the market-place, in the centre of the town, he left a large open square, in which, after the fashion of the old country, fountains (brünnen) were to be erected. In furtherance of this plan, he and his wife, in 1753, deeded to George Ulrich and Frederick Albright, trustees, etc., "a certain tract of land, together with a leading spring on the same, for the use of the inhabitants of Market Street, etc." This "leading spring" lies about four hundred yards south of the town, and its waters are led in through iron pipes. One of the fountains has been erected at the northern end of the square, and the other has been placed in Market Street at some distance from the southern end. They are now under the care and control of a corporation, and a small revenue, sufficient to defray all the expenses incidental to maintaining and repairing the works, is derived therefrom. These were the first water-works established in any town or city in the United States. The water is excellent in quality, and the supply has always, even in times of continued drought, been found to be ample. The people will ever have cause to hold Alexander Shaeffer and his good wife, Anna Engle, in grateful remembrance; and so long as the grass shall grow in the beautiful plot of ground on the hillside on the south end of the town, and the water gush from the sparkling spring, both of which they generously gave "to the people of the town and their children forever," so long shall their memory remain green.

About 1752, Shaeffer erected three large double stone mansions a full mile apart on different portions of his large plot. The middle one is now in the centre of the town, and its large subdivided cellar is regarded as a great curiosity, and is frequently visited by strangers; arches are sprung from the centre pier constructed with heavy masonry, finished in plaster. There is no doubt that when he built it he had in view the security of persons and property from destruction by Indians in case of conflicts among the early settlers.

In the assessment-list for 1758, Heidelberg village is separate from the township return proper, and we give it herewith. It then contained thirty-one taxables, which would show a population of from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty:

Bartel Sebaugh.	Paul Gaberling.
John Souder.	Mathias Albright.
Phillip Erb.	Joho Breght.
Phillip Shertzler.	Jacob Sander.
Christian Bernhard.	Peter Reem.
Jacob Widmer.	Frederick Stump.
Jacob Weaver.	Jacob Seesner.
Geo. Ulrich.	Christin Smith.
Simon Libely.	Phillip Bousman.
Casper Ippo.	Nicholas Stump.
Andrew More.	Joho Tice.
Michael Nagor.	Benetick Imhofe.
Daniel North.	Adam Hildebeld.
Andrew Miller.	John Carman.
Christian Pretz.	Casper Whoofer.
Peter Troowy.

In contrast with that is presented the return for 1782, by which it will be seen that during a period of thirty years there was not much of an increase:

In a German paper, published at Lancaster in 1799, and called the German Porcupine, is an advertisement in which a certain person announces to the public that he is prepared to carry parcels and letters between Womelsdorf and Lancaster, stopping at "Heidelberg-town," and at other places along the route, but by 1820 it was exclusively designated Shaeffers-town. Alexander Shaeffer was born Jan. 8, 1712, and died April 10, 1786. His wife died in 1773, and both were buried in the Reformed Cemetery. To the old fort, half a mile north of town, on land now owned by Solomon Bomberger, the great-grandfather of Charles M. Zerbe, of this town, carried his mother from Tulpehocken for safety.

The oldest building in town is a stone structure, erected in 1752, on the corner of the Market Square, and which was used in ante-Revolutionary times as a hotel, being then known as the "King George." It was for a long period in charge of the Oberly family, and under them its reputation became well established. There is an arched cellar under the whole house built of stone, about ten feet in height, and in which the people of Heidelberg village twice assembled on a threatened invasion by the Indians. The residence of J. A. Zerbe was built in 1758. In the past century a Mr. Pfeiffer started a brewery in a building on Church Street, now owned by Cyrus M. Krall. Baron Steigel made an addition to the town on its south, and which is now generally termed "Canada."

Two miles south of town, on land now owned by Cyrus M. Krall, was the place where the famous races in early times took place. Here came the noted horses of the day from Maryland, and the Shenandoah Valley, Va., to try their speed, and vast crowds collected to see the trials. From 1800 to about 1830, "Cherry Fairs" were noted institutions here, and were simply frolics held at the old village tavern during the cherry season, in which music, dancing, wrestling, and romping were the main features, usually participated in by both sexes.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.—There are fragmentary records showing that as early as 1720 some kind of a church organization was effected, and thereafter preaching was occasionally had by traveling missionaries. The erection of the church was begun in 1765, according to an inscription over the main entrance, and the vane that used to swing from the pinnacle of the old steeple had the figures 1767 cut into it, indicating that it took about two years to build the church. The old building (a massive stone structure) presents an appearance of strength and solidity that bids fair to defy the storms and buffetings of another century. Recently the old steeple began to look dilapidated, and threatened to topple over every time the bell was rung, and it was taken down and a new one, more lofty in its aspirations, put up. The following summer it was struck by lightning, but only slight damage was done. The galleries are around three sides of the building, while on the other side, about half-way up between the floor and the ceiling, is an elaborately-carved pulpit, looking very much like a goblet. Over the pulpit is the sounding-board, while at its foot, inclosing the altar, is the chancel. The old bell that used to hang in the belfry of the old steeple was remarkable for its pure, silvery tone. It was made in London, England, and bore this inscription: "Pack and Chapman, of London, Fecit 1773. For the Lutheran Church, Heidelbergtown, Lancaster County." It was a companion to the one at same time given to Trinity Lutheran Church, of Lancaster. Having become cracked some years ago, it was exchanged by the Troy Bell Foundry for a new one, larger in size, but inferior in tone. The building was repaired and some alterations made in it in 1819, and again in 1855.

On the old communion service of the Lutheran Church is this inscription:

Its pastors have been Samuel Shultz, 1765-1810; William Beates, 1810-36; Jonathan Ruthrauff, 1837-49; J. M. Ditzler, 1849-64; Uriah Graves, 1865-67; George J. Martz, 1867-78; Moses Fernsler, 1878-82. The church was incorporated Nov. 6, 1855, and Nov. 1, 1865, it celebrated its centennial anniversary. Among its earliest members—from 1720 to 1765—were Andreas Moore, born April 30, 1729, his wife Catarina Elizabeth, born April 17, 1732, Conrad Shultz and wife, Jacob Nuss and wife, George Gullman, Johan George Schwengel, Michael Weeber, Johan George Ulrich and wife, Anna Catarina, born respectively Feb. 15, 1726, and Oct. 31, 1717, Johan Wolfersberger, Casper Iba, born Sept. 26, 1726, and his wife, Anna Maria, Adam Waal, Johan Achey, Valentine Vieman, Frederick Albright, Andreas Rickett and wife, Francis Schmidt, George Magnus Cunard, John Peter Rehm, Jacob Geib, Adam Schoener, Frederick Miller and wife, and John Hendrich.

With the erection of the church, in 1765, was established a parochial school. The instruction was altogether German, and continued so as long as the school was in operation. It was taught by Messrs. Yensel, Rehm, and others. Years later the Reformed erected a church and school which, since the other was exclusively German, they made English. This was the first English school in this part of the county, and was taught by Messrs. Bricker, Miller, and White. These schools were well attended, and kept open all the year round. The first school building in the eastern part of the township was built on the laud of John Gockley, now owned by William Hoffman.

In 1849 the Shaefferstown Academy was erected through the efforts of William Weigley, Peter Zimmerman, Dr. Jonathan Zerbe, and George F. Miller. It was first taught by William Missimer, succeeded by Mrs. Emily Miller, who conducted it with much success until its discontinuance.

REFORMED CHURCH.—This congregation was organized about the time the town was laid out, and a frame church was built which stood until 1796, when a stone edifice was erected. In all public undertakings at this period moneys necessary therefor were raised by means of a lottery, whether church or public building, a bridge, or turnpike road. The following fac-simile of ticket No. 1547 will give our readers some idea of the method resorted to in paying for this and the church at Lebanon :

LOTTERY

Authorized by Law of the State of PENNSYLVANIA, for defraying the expences of erecting the Churches lately built by the German Reformed Congregations respectively, in the Borough of Lebanon and in the Town of Heidelberg, in the County of Dauphin.

No. 1547

One Hundred Dollars.

THIS Ticket will entitle the Bearer to such Prize, as may be drawn to its Number, if demanded within twelve Months after drawing. Subject to a deduction of twenty per cent. February 19th, 1800.

Henry Shaffer.

The church of 1796 gave place in 1858 to the present elegant brick structure on the original site. The old records are lost, but it is learned that Rev. Thomas Leinbaugh preached here nearly fifty years as pastor, and after him his sons Samuel S. and Thomas C., and under the latter's auspices the present edifice was constructed. Rev. J. B. Rieger was pastor from 1754 for several years. As far as the records show the pastors have been Thomas C. Leinbaugh, 1856-68; S. S. Sweitzer, 1868-73; James A. Shultz, 1873-74; A. H. Leisse, 1876-78; Adam J. Bachman, 1878-83. The latter is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, and this is his first charge.

The old graveyard on the hill back of the church has been extended, and now includes the Lutheran, Reformed, Evangelical, General, and Steinmetz (addition), five in all. As they are separated in their lots, we give the record of each by itself.

IN THE LUTHERAN burial-ground are interred the following :

OTHER TOWNS IN HEIDELBERG.

The following towns or villages are in the township :

KLEINFELTERSVILLE is a thriving village, where a post-office has long been established, and is situated in the southeastern part of the township, two miles and one-third from Shaefferstown. Here is located an Evangelical Church, a store, and several shops. The place lies in the midst of a rich farming region, teeming with well-to-do husbandmen.

REISTVILLE, formally known as "Achey's Corner," is in the upper part of the township; contains a store, several shops, and a number of private buildings.

FLINTVILLE is a hamlet in the northwestern part of the township, and is in Kurtz school district No. 6.

BUFFALO SPRINGS is a small place in the western part of the township, near South Lebanon township line.

JOHNSTOWN lies in the southwestern part of the township, and is in Johnstown school district No. 9. It has a store and several shops.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP was originally included in Bethel and Heidelberg, but upon the creation of the county of Lebanon, in 1813, it was set apart as it now exists save a small portion, which was cut off upon the organization of Millcreek. It is bounded on the north by Bethel, on the east by Berks County, on the south by Millcreek and Heidelberg, and on the west by North and South Lebanon. It is one of the evenest townships in the county, the land a good limestone, and in the highest state of cultivation.

The township is crossed by the Reading and Harrisburg Turnpike, Union Canal, and Lebanon Valley Railroad, the two former being side by side in their whole course, and the latter is also parallel with it in the western part of the township, but turns toward the south as it proceeds farther east. The principal streams are the Tulpehocken and Swatara, the former running through its centre from west to east. The first settlements in the county were by some German families, prior to 1700, along its banks, and it was through this region that the Indians had their common course in carrying their furs and skins from the west to the east. It was the well-known "Tulpehocken settlement," or, as the name is written in the Provincial Records, "Turpyhocken." The Hon. John Evans, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, passed from the Susquehanna through here on his way to Philadelphia, in July, 1707, accompanied by John French, William Tonge, Michael Bezallion, one Grey, and four servants.

Among the earliest settlers were Philip Breitenbach, who, in 1754, purchased from Martin Noacker a tract of land on which a fort was afterwards erected; the Kusters, Martin Noacker, Nicholas Miller, Martin Walborn, Leonard Batdorf, George Spangler, Capt. Leonard Immel, Casper Stoever, Jacob Spangler, Peter Leni, Peter Horter, John Kreitzer, the Tices, Koppenheffer, Schwengels, Valentine Miller, Bassiers, Musers, Herckelraths, Stangarts, Leys, Bickels, Schells, Kapps, Grings, Bleisteins, Drehers, Kisseckers, Dueys, Haaks. In 1744 the following were the settlers in the eastern part of the township: Mr. Kitzmiller (on the Hochstetter farm), who had the only mill in this region; Christian Walborn (on the late John Tice place); Mr. Batdorf (on the old John Walborn place); Mr. Horter (where Michael Keiser's farm was); Mr. Lauer, near Berks County line (late residence of Rev. Daniel Ulrich); Peter Diffenbach; Mr. Etchberger (late place of Jacob Stewart); Mr. Weiser, and John Tice.

Ezra Spangler, south of Myerstown, lives in a house which, according to the inscription over the door, was built in 1707, and the substantial manner of its erection would indicate that it could scarcely have been the first building in the settlement. There were no extensive settlements until after 1700, but owing to the then friendly relations with the Indians, who still occupied villages on the Tulpehocken Creek, individuals more daring than the rest had pushed forward into the wilderness and made several isolated settlements in this and Heidelberg townships. The stone residence of C. Sherk was built in 1769, and is yet an imposing and substantial structure. A short distance from it is a very fine spring, the largest in the county, and the source of Tulpehocken Creek. Jacob L. Bowman's farm, near Myerstown, was settled by a Mr. Rambler in 1734. The original house, a stone structure, was torn down a few years ago, and in its stead, near the old site, a handsome mansion erected, from which a fine view of the surrounding country may be had. The old house was a fair specimen of ancient, as the new is of modern, architecture.

Near Myerstown, on the Tulpehocken, Valentine Miller had his home about 1750 where his great-grandson Jonathan now lives. Valentine's son, Valentine, was born on that place in 1763, and there died in 1858, aged ninety-five. For many years he manufactured powder in a mill that occupied the present site of Miller's grist-mill. Jonathan, one of his sons (who died in 1875, aged eighty), converted the powder-mill into a plaster-mill. In 1866, Jonathan Miller, Jr., changed the affair to a grist-mill, and in 1872 erected the present fine grist-mill at a cost of eighteen thousand dollars. It has four runs of stone, and has a weekly capacity of one hundred and sixty barrels of flour.

During the French and Indian wars the Indians committed several murders in the township and carried off several children, one of whom, William Jackson, was returned, who had been held captive for some time. In 1762, at the conference held at Lancaster, on one occasion many of the inhabitants of this and adjacent townships met at the house of Benjamin Spyecker, near the present site of Stouchstown. There a company, consisting of three hundred young men under command of Conrad Weiser, went in pursuit of the Indians. Most of them were well armed, though some twenty had nothing but axes and pitch-forks, but they all agreed to die together and engage the enemy wherever they should meet them. This was in October, 1755.

There were several forts or block-houses in the township to which in cases of emergency the inhabitants would flee. One of these was on the old Breitenbach farm, just east of Myerstown. Philip Breitenbach was wont on the many occasions of alarm to take his drum and beat it on an eminence near his house to collect the neighbors from work into the fort. Once the Indians pursued them close to the house, when one of the inmates took up a gun and shot the savage dead on the spot.

A fort was very early erected of palisades hard by the road leading across the Blue Mountains, at Umbenhacker's tavern, where usually a small body of militia was stationed for the protection of the settlers. On one occasion all the men except five had been absent, and the Indians, being privy of the fact, made an attack upon the fort, and before the entrance to the fort could be secured the savages entered and murdered all save one man; he fled, was pursued, having, however, concealed himself, and as an Indian in search of him neared him he shot the Indian. He soon made off farther, and met some of the militia on their way to the fort, to whom he related what had transpired. To convince them that he had shot an Indian, which they seemed first to doubt, they went to the place, where they found the body of an Indian covered with brush. An Indian, who in his endeavor to conceal the body of his fellow, was seen by one of the soldiers at a short distance among some tall grass, was immediately shot. Now believing all was well, the soldier received a deadly wound from a concealed savage.

As early as 1767 the settlers of Jackson township made efforts for the education of their children. Simon Bassler, an extensive land-owner, donated a plot of ground in the centre of the present town of Myerstown, situated on Main Street, while a number of others, principal of whom was John Myer, contributed liberally towards the erection of a building. The log house was erected and a teacher appointed the same year. The course of instruction was altogether German, and so continued until 1817, when, seeing the importance of imparting a knowledge of the English language, a house was erected on the site where the Evangelical Church now stands. The first house was the scene of a number of tragedies perpetrated by the Indians, the number of persons massacred being seven. The house is still known as the German school-house, and is now occupied as a private residence. The management of this school, together with three others erected at later periods within the township limits, was in the hands of three trustees, elected by the citizens. The price of tuition was fixed at fifty cents per month, special provisions having been made for the education of children whose parents were in indigent circumstances. The trustees had sole control in employing, examining, and dismissing teachers. The first teacher of the German school was an individual who is represented as a man of arbitrary and violent temper, inflicting the severest punishment on violators of his rules. The first teacher of the English school was Mr. Couch, who is remembered by the old residents as an educated and refined gentleman, whose methods of instruction were so well liked by his patrons that he was retained from 1817 to 1835. The population of the town and surrounding country having increased so rapidly, it was decided to erect another school-house at the eastern end of the town. This building was completed in 1820; but the applicant for the teacher's position, finding considerable opposition, owing to his intemperate habits, rejected him, who, seeking revenge for his rejection, set fire to the building, and burned it to the ground. A movement was soon after inaugurated to rebuild, which was carried out so successfully that the log house was superseded by a substantial stone structure, octagonal in shape. This building was used for school purposes for a period of fifty years, when it was sold, and is now used as a blacksmith-shop.

The first school-house erected in the township outside of Myerstown, was in the northern part, now known as Ohlwein's, between 1817 and 1820. The course of instruction being altogether German, an individual was employed as teacher, being also a classical scholar, and having lately emigrated to this section from Germany. Little is known of the man's antecedents, but tradition has it that he had fallen in love with a nobleman's daughter, but the father of the young lady, looking with disfavor on the alliance, caused both to leave their native land, and seek their fortune among strangers. He had taken his wife from a home of ease and luxury to one which brought her in contact with all the vicissitudes of life, and this preyed so heavily on his mind that in a fit of despondency he murdered his wife, two children, and hung himself in front of the fireplace in the school-room. Before committing suicide he filled the fireplace with inflammable material, and ignited it, with the intention of removing all traces of the terrible tragedy. The scheme, however, proved unsuccessful, and after the burial of the bodies the house was abandoned. In 1821 a school was started at Royer's German Baptist meeting-house. Its first teacher was Christian Strack. The passage of the school law in June, 1836, fell like a bombshell upon the township.

Opposition to the tenor of the law soon manifested itself, and spread so rapidly that when a popular vote was taken the measure was defeated by an overwhelming majority. This antagonism prevailed until the passage of the act of 1848-49, compelling all districts to accept the provisions of the law. In the mean time schools were kept up, and provisions were made for the instruction of the children of the poor, of which class there appeared to be quite a number. Between 1840 and 1845 all parents in indigent circumstances were reported by the assessor to the county commissioners, who, after hearing the reports, made appropriations for the education of such children. The first tax levied for public-school purposes was collected in 1845, the receipts being wholly used for defraying the expenses of tuition and books of poor children. The first school board was elected in 1849, viz., William Stoever, Jonathan Steiner, John Kreitzer, William Haak, John Tice, and John Mosser.

MYERSTOWN.

This town forms the middle link in the necklace of towns stretched across the beautiful Lebanon Valley, and is a notable example of Pennsylvania enterprise and thrift. Its growth has, perhaps, been greater in a given period of time than most of the towns in this valley. It lies north of the Lebanon Valley Railroad three-quarters of a mile, and is distant from Reading twenty-one miles, and seven miles east from Lebanon. The population is nearly two thousand, and their pursuits are greatly diversified. It is situated in one of the most enchanting valleys of Pennsylvania, near to mountain scenery of great celebrity, in the midst of a region unsurpassed for fertility of soil.

Myerstown was laid out by Isaac Myers in 1768, and from him took its name. It was originally settled by the following persons residing in the central part of the town: Christian Maurer, a mason near the hill; Schnell, a weaver, both Moravians; Mr. Gasser, lately Diehl's tavern; Hoffman, at the old Kintzle house; Henry Brill, tailor, who built and lived at the Brehm place; Haussegger, a Swiss; and Schumacher, one of whose children was carried off by the Indians. The house erected by Mr. Schumacher is still standing, having, however, been raised to two stories, and was for years occupied by the Single family. Another original settler was Nicholas Gast, a man who lived where Isaac Noacker formerly dwelt. The old German school-house was also one of the first buildings of the place. Here seven persons were massacred and scalped,—two women and five children. One woman made her escape though scalped; another was hotly pursued by an Indian, but escaped being killed. While the Indian was in the act of tomahawking her, a man not far off fired his pistol, at which the savage was alarmed and ran off, leaving his victim.

Among the early settlers was Henry Bassler, to whom Casper Wistar conveyed, Jan. 5, 1738, a tract of three hundred and twenty-one acres for a consideration of £128 8s. The deed of transfer recited that the land in question adjoined lands owned by Leonard Rambler and Christian Lehman. The property has descended through four generations to the heirs of Thomas Bassler. Simon Bassler, Sr., grandfather to John H. Bassler, of Myerstown, was detailed as one of the company called upon to guard the captured Hessians imprisoned for a time at Hebron.

Concerning the founder of Myerstown and his descendants we have the following: He was born 4th of January, 1730, in Heidelberg township. He built and lived at the old house recently, if not now, standing near the canal at Myerstown, which at that time was surrounded by forests, and at an earlier day been used as a fort, to which the settlers fled for shelter from the Indians. He was the magistrate, and as such incurred the enmity of some persons. He was called from home one night to a wayside inn, ostensibly to see some one on business, and while sitting with his back to a window, was shot. He lived to be taken home, and before he died requested to see certain persons, and after the interview told his wife not to take measures to find his murderers, as his or their own consciences would be a sufficient punishment. He was only forty years of age when he died, leaving only one son, John, and several daughters. He is buried in the old Reformed graveyard below the town. On his tombstone is the following inscription: "Here lies asleep in God Isaiah Mier." Of his daughters, Maria married William Hiester, of Berks County; Elizabeth married Capt. John Reily, of the Revolution; another became the wife of Col. Joseph Wood, of the Revolution, Jonestown, and another Mrs. Leshar. There are but few direct descendants now living at Myerstown. The old house and farm have passed out of the family. Prof. Reily, of Palatinate College, is a descendant of Elizabeth Myers.

On the return for Heidelberg township for 1782 is the first separate list of residents of Myerstown we have:

Gorman, Jacob.	Etsberger, William.
Armbrister, Jacob.	Brill, Henry.
Hoffman, Jacob.	Gast, Nicholas.
Rot, Jno.	Spangler, Adam.
Gaserd, Jacob.	Eslway, Nicholas.
Stang, Jacob.	Myer, Jacob.
Hidy, John.	Spangler, Martin.

PALATINATE COLLEGE.—This flourishing institution was chartered in 1868, and is invested with full collegiate powers. Its course of instruction thus far has extended only to and including the sophomore year. In connection with the classical there is a scientific and a musical department, in both of which students are graduated. The ladies' course coincides substantially with the scientific. Its first president was Henry R. Nicks, who was succeeded by Rev. G. W. Aughibaugb, D.D. Rev. G. B. Russell, D.D., presided over the institution from the fall of 1881 until the spring of 1883. At present Rev. William M. Reily, Ph.D., for a period of eleven years filled the chair of Languages, has control of the college. Professor Samuel Hemperly has occupied the chair of Mathematics since its founding, and Professor A. T. G. Apple that of Physical Science since June, 1883. The institution is under the control of the Lebanon Classis of the Reformed Church. Rev. Charles H. Leinbach, D.D., is president of the board of trustees; James T. Reber, vice-president; and Rev. H. Musser, secretary. There are three literary societies connected with the college,—the Palatinate, the Excelsior, and the Egerian, the latter composed exclusively of ladies. Each of these have libraries, numbering in all several thousand volumes. The college building is situated on a prominent elevation of ground, adjoining the town of Myerstown. It is a substantial brick structure, the central part or main building four stories high, with wings of three stories, and a basement under the whole. It is one hundred and sixty feet in length, and will accommodate over one hundred boarders. Surrounded by a magnificent farming country, and scenery of unsurpassed beauty, with an able faculty, Palatinate College bids fair to be one of the leading educational institutions in the State.

FRIEDEN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The first steps towards organizing a Lutheran congregation at Myerstown were taken in the year 1811, by members of the old Tulpehocken congregation residing at and near Myerstown. A meeting was held June 23, 1811, at which it was resolved to build a church. The building-committee elected consisted of Christian Ley, Leonard Immel, Leonard Rambler, Jacob Lœhn, Christopher Liess, Christian Artz, and Martin Mayer. The ground for the erection of a church building and burial purposes was donated by Messrs. Michael Mosser and Simon Bassler. Aug. 9, 1811, the first trustees were elected,—Michael Ley, Leonard Immel, and Andreas Shulze. March 30, 1812, the first church council was elected: as Elders, Michael Ley, Leonard Immel, John George Winter, and Christian Walborn; as Deacons, Henry Koppenhoffer, Jacob Heichhold, John Lehman, and Christian Artz.

The corner-stone of the first church was laid April 23, 1812, and on Nov. 1, 1812, the church was solemnly consecrated. The first church built was of stone, its dimensions were fifty-five feet in length and thirty-six feet in width. Its steeple was supplied with a bell. In the year 1819 a Bachman pipe organ was secured at an expense of eight hundred dollars. The first pastor of the congregation was Rev. W. Beates, who was pastor from the time the congregation was organized until the year 1824. In the same year in which Father Beates resigned, Rev. Dr. Ernst was elected pastor, and continued his services as such until his death. In the year 1849, Rev. G. F. Krotel was electd pastor. He served until the year 1852. He was succeeded by Rev. T. T. Jaeger, who was pastor until the year 1855. He was succeeded by Rev. L. G. Eggers, who had charge of the congregation until 1866. During the ministry of Rev. L. G. Eggers, in the year 1857, the congregation resolved to build a new church. At a meeting held March 14, 1857, a building-committee was elected, viz., Leonard Immel, John Kreitzer, Casper Sherk, Henry Groh, and Samuel Hauck. The old church in which the congregation had worshiped forty-five years was taken down in the month of June, 1857. The corner-stone of the new church was laid Aug. 16, 1857, and in 1858 the edifice was consecrated. In 1865, Rev. M. Eggers retired from the charge, and in the spring of 1867, Rev. F. J. F. Schantz, the present pastor.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL CHURCH was organized in 1844, in which year a church edifice was erected upon land purchased of John Bassler. The first trustees were Samuel Levangood, Benjamin Garret, Michael Hack, Peter Helm, Jr., and Jacob Focht. In 1878 the present house of worship replaced the old one, in the lower story of which latter, it may be observed, the first pastor, Rev. Henry Buchs, had his residence. The present pastor is Rev. E. J. Miller. The charge includes seven appointments, and has a membership of two hundred and sixty.

MYERSTOWN UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.—On the 13th of October, 1842, a United Brethren class was formed at Myerstown and comprised thirteen members. The first pastor was Rev. S. Enterline. He was succeeded by Rev. C. S. Crider, whose term lasted from 1845 to 1847. In 1843 a stone church edifice was erected. The trustees were Jonas Eckert, John Myers, and John Daniel. The present brick church was built in 1869. The cost of church and parsonage was about ten thousand dollars. The pastor is Rev. Jacob Mark, and the trustees J. B. Haak, Andrew Steiner, David Tice, Isaac Miller, and Michael Haak.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH was organized April 13, 1868, by Rev. J. M. Deitzler. William L. Miller was chosen elder, Jacob G. Miller and Joel Strause deacons, Henry Miller trustee, and R. A. Miller treasurer. The Myerstown Academy building was purchased for three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, and dedicated June 21, 1868. The successive pastors have been Revs. G. J. Martz, William I. Cutter, — Lenhart, and P. C. Krull.

THE REFORMED CHURCH was organized on the 8th day of September, 1860, with a membership of two hundred and fifty, and by the adoption of a charter at a congregational meeting on the 20th of October following, severed the connection hitherto existing between the old Tulphocken congregation and the branch church at Myerstown. The officers elected were Daniel Mosser, David Hollinger, Joseph Diehl, John Muth, and Thomas Bassler, trustees; Cyrus Sherk, George Line, John Rauch, and William Loose, elders; and Peter Spangler, Jr., Israel Till, Augustus Bauey, and Andrew Tice, deacons. On the 12th of November a unanimous call was given to Rev. George Wolff, of Paradise, Northumberland Co., Pa., and from the 1st of January, 1861, to the present, Rev. Mr. Wolff has served that congregation. The present membership is over five hundred.

OTHER VILLAGES OF JACKSON TOWNSHIP are
 WEST MYERSTOWN.—Built along the turnpike west of Myerstown proper, extending a considerable distance in the direction of Lebanon.

KUTZTOWN.—A small village about a mile and a half north of Myerstown, in school district No. 7.

MYERSTOWN STATION.—On the Lebanon Valley Railroad, nearly a mile south of Myerstown, and is fast being built up.

PRESCOTT STATION.—Midway between Lebanon and Myerstown, and is a growing place.

A DUNKARD CHURCH.—Located one and three-fourths miles southeast of Myerstown.

A REFORMED CHURCH.—On the pike two and a half miles east of Myerstown, near the Berks County line.

MILL CREEK TOWNSHIP.

By acts of the General Assembly, passed at the sessions of 1843 and 1844, E. Cherrington, Samuel Becker, and George Pflieger were appointed commissioners to run the boundary line of Mill Creek township to include parts of Heidelberg and Jackson townships, and in pursuance thereof made the following report to the court Feb. 26, 1844: "Beginning at the Lancaster and Lebanon County line at the forks of the public road adjoining lands of Michael Sharp, in the township of Heidelberg, thence through the township of Heidelberg north forty-nine degrees west five miles and eleven perches to a post on the Jackson township line near the house of Catherine Miller; thence through the said Jackson township south forty-seven degrees and a half west three and one-half miles and twenty-two and a half perches to a post on the Berks County line in the public road leading from Adam Klopp's mill in Berks County to the Millcreek Church in Lebanon County; thence along the Berks and Lebanon County line south forty-seven degrees and a half east six miles and forty-six perches to a large chestnut at corner of Lebanon and Lancaster Counties; thence along said Lebanon and Lancaster County line south sixty-five degrees and a half west three and one-half miles and seventy-four perches to the beginning," containing together twelve thousand five hundred and eight acres. By this survey about five hundred acres were cut off from Berks County.

The township lies in the extreme southeastern part of the county, and received its name from the Mühlbach or Mill Creek, a considerable stream which, rising in Heidelberg township, flows through its centre from west to east, and empties into the Tulpehocken. There are several smaller streams. Its southern border is separated from Lancaster County by the South Mountain. The land is generally level and well improved, the soil being principally limestone and of a good quality. The township borders on Berks and Lancaster Counties, and compares favorably with its sister-townships in the intelligence and enterprise of its people.

The first settlement was made in the township, not later than 1720, by the German Baptists, generally known as Dunkards. One of their prominent members, Conrad Beissel, a native of Germany, arrived in America in 1720, and took up his abode at Mühlbach, on the Mühlbach, or Mill Creek. Here he and one Stantz built a house, and they were soon joined by Isaac Van Bibber, George Steibel, and others. Conrad Beissel, being somewhat dissatisfied with some of the observances of his brethren, commenced promulgating his views, and eventually seceded from the Dunkard community, and formed a new sect, known as the German Seventh-Day Baptists, wholly intent upon seeking out the true obligation of the word of God, and the proper observances of the rites and ceremonies it imposes, stripped of human authority. He conceived there was an error among the Dunkards in the observance of the day for the Sabbath; that the seventh day was the command of the Lord God, and that day being established and sanctified by the Great Jehovah forever, no change nor authority for change had ever been announced to man by any power sufficient to set aside the solemn decree of the Almighty, a decree which he declared had been forever sanctified. Mr. Beissel felt it to be his duty to contend for the observance of that day, and in 1725 published a tract entering into a discussion of this point, which created some excitement and disturbance in the society at Mühlbach, upon which he retired from the settlement, and went secretly to a cell on the banks of the Cocalico, that had been previously occupied by one Elimelich, a hermit. His place of retirement was unknown for some time to the people he had left, and when discovered, many of the society at Mill Creek, who had become convinced of the truth of his proposition for the observance of the Sabbath, settled around him in solitary cottages. They adopted the original Sabbath, the seventh day, for the public worship, in 1728, which has ever since been observed by their descendants even unto the present day. In 1732 the solitary life was changed into a conventicle one, and a monastic society was established as soon as the first buildings erected for that purpose were finished, May, 1733, at Ephrata, Lancaster Co. Beissel died July 6, 1768, aged seventy-seven years.

The following resided in the limits of the present township in 1753: "Dillman Shite, David Taylor, Moses Irwin, Jacob Huber, Abraham Roland, Jacob Polinger, Ludwig Cole, Simon Tobias, Yost Blagher, Henry Stiegel, John Pofasberger, Nicholas Smith, Casper Simon, Martin Shooddy, Stephen Benninger, Jacob Selzer, John Timothe, Tobias Hauk, Balser Shade, Michael Balmer, Henry Botts, Henry Hoyle, Hannickel Entsminger, Hannickel Eutsminger, Sr., Henry Wise, Stephen Yoachy, Jacob Gass, Christian Pence, Samuel Sellar, Mr. Shouffer (the tailor). Freemen,—John Sheets, George Lidigh, George Hoyle, Peter Porgner, Yelia Swally, Jacob Stelly, Ulrich Bare, John Pile, John Bale, George Ougansteen, John Switzer." Among the early settlers of "Haseltein," Hazel Valley, so called from the abundance of hazels grown there, were the following from Wurtemberg, Germany: William Becher (on place of the late Isaac Blecher), Jost Hoffman (farm afterwards owned by Hibschan), George Smith (late George Krum's homestead), John Roth (late farm of Henry Haak), Mr. Bollman (on Miller's old place near Mühlbach), and Henry Strack (whose land Jacob Wagner so long owned).

The principal settlers in the township were Germans, the first of whom came from Schoharie County, N. Y. Among the earliest of note was Conrad Weiser, who came from Schoharie, accompanied by his wife and his five children, in 1723. After making a treaty with the Indians, he started a settlement at Mühlbach. He afterwards settled near the present town of Womelsdorf, in Berks Co., where he died and was buried. Walter Newman and his wife, Elizabeth, came from Ireland, he having, in 1741, received two tracts of land from the Proprietaries. A man named Tice settled at Tulpehocken, and worked for Frederick Miller at nine cents a day. Land then sold at a dollar per acre. Among those who came from Schoharie County, N. Y., were John Stump, Michael Meiser, John Noll, Michael Zeller, John Moore, Henry Moyer, Nicholas Lechner, John Grove, and Christian Seibert, all settled at Mühlbach. Afterwards Frederick Kopp and several others settled at Newmansville. In 1724 Michael Meiser took up the land now owned by George Meiser. He, with twelve other families on a journey, encamped at that place over night, and finding a fine spring of pure water, he concluded to settle there, which he did, constructing for himself a hut of bark, in which he resided three years. Among the families that settled here at that time were the Zellers, Fakes, Stumps, and Beckers. The Moores came two years later. Michael Meiser died at the age of forty-two years, leaving his property to his eldest son, George, and it descended from one generation to another, until it is now owned by one of the fifth generation, George Meiser, now over fourscore years. A strange coincidence connected with this property is that it has been owned during four generations by the eldest sons, and that each one's name was George. The present owner has also a son and a grandson named George.

The first church built in the township was at Mühlbach, and it still stands as a monument of the religious devotion of a people who, far removed from the civilized world, out in the savage wilds of the wilderness, did not forget their allegiance to Him who rules over and controls the destinies of nations. Here the settlers for miles around came to worship, generally armed, fearful lest that at an unguarded moment an attack should be made upon them by the savage foe. The first house built exclusively for school purposes was erected at Newmanstown in 1810, and was one story in height. In 1827 it was raised to two stories, and the upper one used as a church. About the same time a school was organized by the church at Mill Creek Centre. This was continued until 1849, when it was torn down. The first mill, which still stands, was built in 1778, at Mühlbach, and the second at Cherrington's Hill, by Philip Kalbach, in 1800. The oldest dwelling-houses in the township are those of Mr. Garrett, near Sheridan, and Mr. Zellers, near Newmanstown, both of which were used as forts by the early settlers, to which they repaired at night for protection against the Indians. The house of E. R. Illig, at Mühlbach, was built in 1752. The mill erected by Kalbach has since been owned by Ezekiel, John F., and James E. Cherrington (present proprietor)—father, son, and grandson. J. Moore's house was built in 1762. It may be here remarked that there are few localities in Pennsylvania where so great a proportion of tracts of land remain in the possession of the descendants of the original settlers as in the Mühlbach, and which show, too, the great thrift, enterprise, and intelligence of their owners.

On the South Mountain, in the southern end of Lebanon County adjoining Berks, there is a plateau or table-land extending some nine miles in length and from three to six miles in breadth. There are some good farms on this table-land and large areas of excellent timber. Wild glens cut through the sides of this plateau at numerous points, down which turbulent brooks find their way into the adjacent valleys. On this table-land is located the celebrated Texter farm, which at one time contained nineteen hundred acres, but John Texter by subsequent exchanges and sales prior to his death reduced the area of his mountainous plantation to the neighborhood of twelve hundred and fifty acres. As it is, it is a large farm, and celebrated not only for rare management, but for the excellent live-stock raised thereon.

NEWMANSTOWN.

This ancient little town is situated on the north-east border of Mill Creek township, and was formerly known as Newbury. The tract of two hundred and thirty-four acres of land upon which the town is built was purchased of the proprietors of the Province of Pennsylvania by Walter Newman, Oct. 30, 1741, and by his direction the town was laid out and lots sold upon the "ground-rent" plan of disposing of village or town lots. The oldest indenture we have been able to find of lots conveyed or rented by the said Newman is one of Aug. 26, 1761, to Bernard Jacob for one lot, with a yearly rent of sixteen shillings; said lot is bounded as follows: "Beginning at a post by a street of sixty-five feet wide, and by the said North sixty-six degrees, east eleven perches, to a Lot of Charrels Shenckel & by the Said North twenty-four Degrees west eighteen perches to other land of the said Walter Newman, and by the Said South Sixty-Six Degrees west Seventy-four feet to a post, thence South west five perches & fifteen feet, to a post by other lands of the S^d Bernard Jacob, and by the Said South East Thirteen perches and one-half perch to a post, thence by the Said South fifty-three Degrees west Seven perches, to the place of the Beginning. Containing one hundred and forty perches of land (being a part of the aforesaid Tract of 234 Acres with allowances, &c.)."

At that date this tract was in Heidelberg township, Lancaster Co., subsequently in Berks County, then Dauphin, and now mostly in Lebanon County.

On the 13th of December, 1773, Walter Newman indentured to "Christofer Boyer lots number forty-five and forty-seven in a plan of a certain town called Newbury, at a rental of sixteen shillings annually forever," reserving the right, as in all other cases, to reoccupy and dispossess the tenant at the expiration of sixty days after said rent becomes due and unpaid. On these lots Boyer agrees "to erect and finish a good and substantial dwelling-house twenty feet by eighteen in bigness, with a good chimney of brick or stone, to be laid in or built with lime and sand, within the space of three years after the date hereof," etc.

June 17, 1772, Walter Newman legally granted to Peter Newman seventy-two acres and one hundred and twenty-nine perches of land in fee, situated in Heidelberg township, and Peter Newman granted the same in fee to his son, Henry Newman, by will dated Aug. 26, 1790, and Henry Newman granted by deed and release, in fee simple, dated June 24, 1793, for the sum of twelve pounds ten shillings, to Nicholas Shlichter, one hundred perches of the above seventy-two acres, one hundred and twenty-nine perches. This lot is described in the deed as being "near Newman's Town, on the Great Road leading through the aforesaid Town to Reading." This latter deed was dated in Berks County.

In another deed, dated March 19, 1791, we find that Frederick Hoffman, of Heidelberg, Dauphin

Co., deeded to Nicholas Shlichter a piece of land in the town of Newbury (Newmanstown), known as lot number fifty-one, containing one-half acre of land, also one other the quarter lot of ground, containing in all a full three-quarter parts of a lot of ground, it being the same lot of ground which Walter Newman, by three indentures bearing date in the year 1765, granted to a certain Grieb, who, May 10, 1768, deeded to Andrew Newman, and Newman deeded, Sept. 20, 1771, to Henry Mayer, and Mayer to George Godfrey by deed Feb. 16, 1778. Walter Newman, by three indentures dated Sept. 11, 1768, granted the same to Peter Newman, and Peter Newman, 11th of blank month, 1774, granted the same to John Burmann, who granted to Henry Mayer, and Mayer, by deed dated Feb. 16, 1788, sold to George Godfrey, and Dec. 1, 1779, Godfrey granted to George Leinch, and Leinch assigned his interest in the lots to Frederick Hoffman, above mentioned.

By a certain deed, dated May 30, 1806, Nicholas Shlichter, of the town of Newbury, deeded the above-mentioned lots of land to John Dengler, in consideration of the sum of fifty pounds in gold and silver, current lawful money of the State of Pennsylvania.

The above gives us a faint idea of who the first settlers in what is now Newmanstown were. The Newmans were quite an extensive as well as popular family, and it is to be regretted that no data could be procured from which to write a brief sketch of those who left a town named in honor of their thrift and enterprise.

One of the peculiarities of this town is, and always has been, the system of ground-rents. Walter Newman adopted, or rather originated, the plan of leasing lots, the amount of money to be paid yearly forever, so that nearly the whole of the present town, including Steinmetz' and Stewart's additions, are under the curse of one of the most unpopular systems of taxation that was ever invented. A large portion of the surrounding country was at one time under the same feudal system, but fortunately has by various means and various times been relieved of the burden.

In 1782 the return of Heidelberg contains that of "Newmans Town" separately, which is herewith given.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION has a neat church edifice and a growing congregation respectively, erected and organized a few years ago.

MILLBACH,

or Mühlbach in the German, and often called "Mill Creek Centre," was the seat of the first settlement in the township. The old stone mill was built in 1778, and the house of E. R. Illig in 1752. It contains a store, hotel, church, mill, some shops, and several tasteful dwellings. Messrs. E. R. Illig and Paul D. Shultz (merchant) have large and elegant collections of Indian relics collected largely from this immediate vicinity, which embrace Indian beads, arrow-points, axes, hammers, and a great variety of articles relative to the savages who two centuries ago had homes here.

THE REFORMED AND LUTHERAN CHURCH is a large two-story stone edifice erected in 1790, and which supplanted a frame structure, the successor of a log building, the first meeting-house built. The records show this church, jointly Reformed and Lutheran, to have organized the two respective congregations in 1747. The present edifice has three galleries, with pulpit on the fourth side and entered by stairs. Its old Bible, in German text, was printed in 1747, and the services are mostly yet conducted in the German language. The Reformed pastor is Rev. Adam J. Bachman, and the Lutheran, A. Johnston Long. The superintendent of the Union Sunday-school is John B. Moore.

Betz, Samuel, d. May 6, 1828, aged 62.

SHERIDAN, formerly called Missimer's Station, is situated near the Berks County line on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. The first house here was built in 1856 by Henry Missimer, and used as a tavern. Since the opening of the railroad the place has grown and become of note owing to the iron furnaces here established. The first furnace was erected in 1862, by William M. Kaufman and Frederick Hunter, and rebuilt as an anthracite furnace in 1867 by William M. Kaufman & Brother. Furnace No. 2 was erected in 1874 by William M. Kaufman & Co., the present owners and proprietors. No. 1 has a capacity of one hundred and twenty-five, and No. 2 of one hundred and seventy-five, tons of iron per week. This iron is in great demand, being made from ore of the first quality, and manufactured into pig-iron in a superior manner. The firm has about eighty hands here employed, and T. M. Kaufman is the resident manager. It also has an anthracite furnace in Schuylkill County, and two anthracite and one charcoal furnaces in Berks. The company's main office is in Reading.

RICHLAND, a station on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, nine miles east from Lebanon, owes its existence to the railway. Isaac Weigley, still a resident of the village, built in 1838 the first house erected upon what is now the village site. The locality was then a farming tract. With the completion of the railroad and the location of a station at that point, Richland invited notice. Samuel K. Landes built a store and hotel in 1859, and as the site was an attractive one population drew in albeit slowly.

STRICKLERSTOWN is a pleasant hamlet in the western part of the township, near which is Royer's meeting-house, Dunkard (Baptist), a neat brick structure erected in 1851. Attached is a tastefully laid-out cemetery, in which many old pioneers are buried.

KRUMSTOWN lies in the northwestern part of the township, near the Jackson line, and is in Krum's school district No. 7. The school-house and several dwellings form the settlement.

LONDONDERRY TOWNSHIP.

To understand the erection of Londonderry township it is necessary to go back to the erection of Derry in 1729, at the time of the organization of Lancaster County. "As settled and agreed upon by the magistrates and inhabitants of the said county on the 9th day of June, and confirmed by the Court of Quarter Sessions the 1st of August ensuing, Anno Domini 1729," the boundaries of Derry were as follows:

"The township of Derry, beginning at the mouth of Conewago, thence up Susquehanah to the mouth of Suataaro, thence up Suataaro to the mouth of Quetopohello, thence south on a direct line to Conewago, and down the same to the place of beginning."

The eastern boundary of this township as originally adopted seems to be involved in some uncertainty. To pursue the letter of the foregoing order, to run south on a direct line from the mouth of the Quitopahilla Creek to Conewago Creek, would strike the latter something like seven miles lower down than the point which, from everything which can now be discovered, seems to have been originally adopted as the southeast corner of Derry township,—that, instead of running the eastern line of the township south on a direct line, as the record calls for, the Quitopahilla Creek, Killinger's Run, and a line southeast from the head of that run to strike the Conewago Creek, seems most probable, if not entirely certain. This is inferred from the following facts: First. All the territory which lay between the Susquehanna River and eastern boundary of Lebanon township, and between the Conewago Creek and the mountain, was at the same time divided into three townships, viz., Pesh-tank, Derry, and Lebanon. To adhere to a line directly south from the mouth of the Quitopahilla would have left the territory of Derry township very limited as compared with that of the other two townships. By adopting the Quitopahilla, etc., as the eastern boundary of Derry, that township was still less than either of the other two, but of course bore a better proportion to them. Second. In the year 1768 the inhabitants of Derry township applied to the court for a division of the township, whereupon, at the February sessions that year, "the court, taking into consideration a petition preferred to them by the inhabitants of Derry township, setting forth that the bounds of the said township were very extensive and large, and the inhabitants thereof labored under several inconveniences by reason thereof, and praying the said court to divide the said township into two parts, according to a boundary line agreed upon by the said inhabitants, to wit:

"Along a certain road leading from Conewago Creek, by the widow Hall's, thence to Felix Landis, Sr., at Swatara Creek, which said road is to fall into the east part of the said township, and that the said part be known by the name of Londonderry, and that the west part of said township retain the name of Derry. It is considered and ordered by the court that the said township be divided agreeable to the prayer of said petition, and that the said part to the east be known by the name of Londonderry, and the west end be known by the name of Derry, which said division line is hereby confirmed to be and remain firm and stable forever, and as such to be entered of record."

Now, if in the year 1768 a line directly south from the mouth of the Quitopahilla to the Conewago Creek was considered as the eastern boundary of Derry township, a division of it by the road before mentioned would have been most objectionable, as it would have left Londonderry township but a mere slip of territory, for some distance not a mile wide. And lastly, if the Quitopahilla Creek, etc., was not considered in 1768 as the originally adopted eastern boundary of Derry township, how or when was the township of Londonderry brought up to that line? There is no record or authority found, creating the township of Londonderry other than by the division of Derry in 1768, before mentioned, nor any afterwards extending the limits of the former eastward, and yet it is certain that Londonderry extended eastward to the Quitopahilla and Killinger's Run line in 1799, when on the occasion of a division of Lebanon township, Londonderry was called for on that line, as may be seen on reference to Annville township. Upon these grounds the conclusion, that the Quitopahilla Creek, Killinger's Run, and a line southeast from the head of that run to the Conewago Creek, was the originally adopted eastern boundary of Derry township, seems to be warranted; notwithstanding it must be admitted that that line does not appear to be in strict accordance with the foregoing record.

When the county of Lebanon was formed, therefore, the eastern portion of the township fell into the new county and retained the name Londonderry. As thus established the township is bounded on the north by East Hanover and North Annville townships, on the east by South Annville and Cornwall townships, on the south by the county of Lancaster, and on the west by the county of Dauphin. It contains nearly twenty-six thousand acres of land, a greater portion of the best, but some of the worst, in the county. The central portion of the township is level limestone soil, with some gravel and slate; the northern part is undulating, while the south and southwestern parts are hilly, and in the neighborhood of the Conewago Creek much of it covered with sienite bowlders of huge size. The Conewago Hills, belonging to the South Mountain range, are in the southern part of the township. The Quitpahilla Creek separates Londonderry from North Annville, Killinger's Run from South Annville, while in the northwest the Swatara divides it from East Hanover. The head-waters of the Conewago Creek are almost wholly within the township.

The Lebanon Valley Railroad crosses the upper part of the township, a short distance north of the Harrisburg and Reading Turnpike. The "Horse-shoe Turnpike" crosses the township near the centre.

Although the original settlers were principally Scotch-Irish, but few of their descendants are now residing within the township. The places of these early pioneers were taken by the Germans, who have mostly held the lands to the present time. The assessment-lists for the east end of Derry in 1751 and 1759 give us, perchance, the names of most of the early settlers at that period:

This township, being more towards the interior, was not so exposed as the more northern townships to the incursions of the Indians. Nevertheless, the barbarous savages penetrated into the more sparsely-settled parts, and committed several murders and effected abductions. June 10, 1757, nineteen persons were killed in a mill on Quitopahilla Creek, and on September 7th following, a boy and girl were taken prisoners from Donegal township, a few miles south. About the same time one Danner and his son, Christian Danner, a lad of twelve years, had gone out into the Conewago Hills to cut down some trees; after felling one, and while the father was cutting a log, he was shot and scalped by the Indians, and Christian, the son, taken captive, carried off to Canada, where he was kept several years, when he made his escape from them. Another young lad named Steger was, while cutting some hoop-poles, surprised by three Indians and captured, but, fortunately, after remaining some months with the savages, made his escape. Jacob and Henry Bowman, brothers, both young men, were taken by some Indians, who tied them in a secluded place in the thickets, and proceeded, as was supposed, to the Conestoga Indians, with a view, when returning from thence, to take them to Canada; but in the mean time a Mr. Shally returned from Lancaster to Lebanon, and they, perceiving him, called, and he immediately went to the place where they were and unloosed them, and they returned to their home, in the vicinity of the present Palmyra. As late as July, 1763, the reapers in this township took their guns and ammunition with them into the harvest-fields to defend themselves against the Indians.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century there were five schools in operation in various parts of the township. One of these, located near Colebrook, was established by the Presbyterians, and was the first school in the township. Another in the northern part, one at Palmyra, one at Campbellstown, and one at Bindnagle's Church. In the records of this church is a bequest, made by a German named Berger, of one hundred pounds sterling, donated in 1779. Its provisions are that one-third of the interest should go to the minister's salary, one-third to the salary of the teacher, and the remaining one-third to be regularly added to the principal. This was carried out until 1846, when the school was discontinued, and the money has been accumulating ever since.

The schools at Palmyra took a very high rank. Among the early teachers of this district must be mentioned Alexander Dasher, a faithful laborer in his chosen work, of whom the older portion of the community speak in highest terms of praise. Palmyra Academy was founded in 1857 by Professor Peter B. Witmer, and its career from the beginning has been a prosperous one. Few local educational institutions have had a wider celebrity. It has been the preparatory school for college for a large number of young men, and, despite the present excellence of the free schools, its higher grade of learning retains for it its early prestige.

The celebrated COLEBROOK Furnaces, in the southern part of the township, at the South Mountain, were established in 1784, and continued in active operation until 1854, when they were abandoned, the anthracite furnaces at Cornwall supplying the demand. There is a post-office here, COLEBROOK, and near it the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Coleman mansion.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPEL is located one-half mile north of Colebrook, a REFORMED AND LUTHERAN CHURCH, south of Colebrook, near the Lancaster County line, and a UNION CHURCH at the old Eppler homestead, between Kelly's Corner and Colebrook.

KELLY'S CORNER, about half a mile west of Colebrook, is a small hamlet, around which are the descendants of the Risser, Logans, Brubakers, Brants, Lehmanns, Moyers, Killingers, Bakers, and others of the early settlers.

CAMPBELLSTOWN is situated near the centre of the township, on the "Horse-shoe Pike." In 1759, John Campbell took out a patent for three hundred and fifty-two acres of land in Dery township. He also purchased from Patrick Hays and William Sawyer one hundred and two acres of land adjoining the other tract. The land-holders who owned the adjoining land were the Widow Sloan, John McCord, William Sawyer, Peter Delabaugh.

About the year 1760, John Campbell laid out a town on the largest of the above-named tracts. After his death this property descended to his only brother, Patrick Campbell, who, with his wife, Eleanor, sold it to Peter Grubb, Jr., April 28, 1779. At this period there were several buildings erected, all subject to ground rent. The town was no doubt "extensively laid out," and as was the custom at that time the lots were disposed of by lottery. On the 29th day of April, 1780, Peter Grubb, Jr., sold Campbellstown, and the two tracts of land, together with the ground-rents, to Robert Coleman, iron-master, of Elizabeth Furnace, in Elizabeth township, Lancaster Co., for the sum of ninety-nine thousand pounds. This seems like an extraordinary price, but it must not be forgotten that the currency had depreciated very much at that time, and it is doubtful whether a horse could have been purchased with it five years later.

The principal Scotch-Irish settlers in this locality were the Campbells, Semples, Pattersons, Mitchells, Sawyers, McCallens, and Geddes, few of whose descendants remain. The Logan family is about the only one left in the vicinity of the old Scotch Presbyterian element. The first white child of which we have record, born in this neighborhood, was John Sawyer, in 1729. He was the son of William Sawyer, born in Ireland, and who was an apprentice bound to a comb-maker, and not liking his master, the elder Sawyer came to America in 1720. He died at the age of eighty-one, and his son, John, at eighty-three, both being buried in the old Derry graveyard, just over the county line and in Dauphin County. The last descendant of the Sawyer and McCallen families was William Geddes, recently living in Ypsilanti, Mich., and who formerly taught school in Campbellstown.

The oldest house in the place is yet standing, and was the building where the earliest tavern and store were kept. A Mr. Houtz kept it first, followed successively by Swarr, Harman, Benjamin Hocker, and later, for a period of thirty years, by John Deininger. The post-office was established in 1811, with John Wolfersberger as the postmaster. D. B. Gingrich is the present (1883) incumbent. The oldest of the German families are the Wolfersbergers, concerning whose reference is made in our genealogical record.

THE SALEM CHURCH (Lutheran and Reformed) is an elegant stone structure, built in 1845, on the site of the old church erected over a century and a quarter ago. Among the old settlers here buried are the following:

PALMYRA.

Palmyra, a town of over six hundred inhabitants, is situate on the line of the Lebanon Valley Railroad, sixteen miles east from Harrisburg, and in the midst of one of the finest farming districts in Pennsylvania. It was laid out during the Revolutionary era by John Palm. The founder was a native of the Kloister of Heilbrün, Germany, where he was born July 25, 1713. He came to America in 1749, and settled in Derry, afterwards Londonderry township, then Lancaster County. He died on the 25th of April, 1799, at Palmyra; and is buried in the graveyard of Bindnagel's Church.

Palm named the town Palmstown. It was laid out on both sides of the Harrisburg and Reading road, and the prospects of the town were bright enough for several years, when an unusual drought occurred, and so great was the water-famine at Palms-town that the aid of the Legislature was invoked. That body, however, suggested that the wells be dug deeper. Of course this was done, and since that period there has been no water-famine in that locality. For many years it was a town of one street. The location of the Lebanon Valley Railroad, which was made some distance from it, caused the laying out of a thoroughfare at right angles with the main street of the town, and the present plan of Palmyra is of the shape of the letter L. We have, nevertheless, yet to learn to whose sublime forethought the name of the village was changed from Palmstown to Palmyra.

Owing to the excellent farming lands in the neighborhood it attracted many substantial people to it, and during the years 1809 to 1815 a Masonic lodge was one of its principal institutions, being situated as it was in a Scotch-Irish neighborhood. With the passing away of this latter element, that body went out of existence.

The oldest dwellings now standing in the town are those owned and occupied by Professor Witmer, and the Thome mansion on the opposite side of the street. They were probably among the first houses erected,—a century ago. In 1812 the following houses had been built: the Peter Witmer house, a log building, weather-boarded, now occupied by Prof. P. B. Witmer; the Abraham Phillips house, now owned and occupied by Mrs. Thome; the stone house, built in 1812, now owned by Mrs. Bowman; the stone building in which the store was kept; the Christopher Miller house, where John Ream now lives; the John Miller house, now owned by the widow of the late Rudolph Miller; the next was a little house then occupied by — McIntosh as a dwelling and shoe-shop; the Susau Henry house, now owned by Abraham Zimmerman; the old Lineaweaver tavern-house, now owned by Philip Deitrick; the little house of Mrs. Urchen, then owned by Richard McEay; the old Hawk, or Hauck, tavern building, now owned by John Kratzer; the Conrad Horstick property; the Henry Longanecker farm-house; and the Kettering tavern-stand, now owned by C. F. Boyer. All these buildings were along the turnpike west of the Peter Witmer house, or west of what is now the Palmyra Academy. We have referred to the latter flourishing institution in our sketch of the township proper.

The location of the town on the line of the railroad, and surrounded by fine productive farms, will add to its material prosperity. The establishment of a few industrial works will also give it an impetus. In 1877 an organ-factory was established by Galen Hemperly, which has proved thus far a successful undertaking, and angurs well for the future.

"LUTHERISCHE UND REFORMIRTE PALM KIRCHE, ERBAUT 1845."—The Lutheran and Reformed Church is a stone structure standing on the east side of Main Street in the quaint old town of Palmyra, and bears on its front the foregoing inscription indicating its joint ownership and date of erection. The Reformed ministers who have served the congregation worshipping here were: Revs. Joel Reber, 1845; Jacob Zehring, 1846; Aaron S. Linebach, —; Charles Hoofmoyer, —; Rev. Jonathan Hiestler, from 1850 to the present time. The ministers of the Lutheran congregation during the same period were: Rev. Fogelbach, 1845; L. G. Eggers, —; W. G. The UNION BETHEL (Church of God) is a neat brick church edifice standing on the east side of Main Street, built in 1863.

ZION CHAPEL OF THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION was built in 1873, on the east side of Railroad Avenue, which was occupied as their place of worship until 1882, when the last family of that organization removed from Palmyra, since which no services have been held in the chapel.

UNITED BROTHERS IN CHRIST.—The first church edifice in this vicinity was built in 1846, of brick, and stands on Gravel Hill, west of Palmyra village, and at present unoccupied as a place of worship. In 1870 the congregation built a frame church building on Main Street, Palmyra, where all their religious services are held.

Brown, Christian, b. June 8, 1795; d. June 7, 1868.
 Brown, Sarah (Shuey), b. Jan. 7, 1801; d. Jan. 26, 1870.

BINDNAGEL'S CHURCH.—Three miles north of Palmyra is located Bindnagel's Church, so named for an old family in that neighborhood. It was organized at an early day, but the records give no precise date. A log church was built, prior to 1755, on the site of the present brick structure, erected in 1803. About the time of building the new church the old log building was removed to the village of Palmyra, and converted into a dwelling-house, and now owned by Professor Witmer. Upon the conversion of the old church into a dwelling, the original doors and windows were used with the rest of the structure, and the former are still swinging upon the same old hinges that supported them a century and a half ago, and at night are fastened with the same old wrought-iron lock and key as in days of yore. As stated, the new church was built in 1803, is of brick, two stories high, and in size thirty-six by forty-five feet. There are three entrances to the building,—one in front and one at each end. The interior furnishing remains as when erected, with the old-fashioned high pulpit, eight and a half feet from the floor or main audience-room, and approached by two flights of zigzag stairs. Over the pulpit, supported by fastenings to the wall, is suspended a wooden canopy. Near the centre of the room, and in front of the pulpit, is a stationary square-box table, surrounded by a square railing three and a half feet high. Between the table and railing is a space sufficient for a person to pass around. The ceiling of the room is arched, and painted a sky blue. The pews on the main floor are arranged in four sections, or in each corner of the room, the main aisle running lengthwise the building, while the aisle from the front entrance terminates at the communion-table above described. The galleries are wide and roomy, and are approached by a flight of broad stairs from each end of the main floor. The belfry supports a fine-toned bell, that for forty odd years summoned the dwellers of Bindnagel to the house of God to hear His word expounded by those old and faithful veterans of the Cross. Hallowed memories still cling around the old Kirche in its declining and decaying years, and soon it will be left to the bats and moles, while its offspring—the Lutheran and German Reformed Church, at Palmyra—will live on for another century or two, for when that stone edifice was erected in 1845, old Bindnagel was practically abandoned.

From the old record-books of the church we find these as the earliest marriages, with the note at the foot of the page containing them. "From this period (1798) to the year 1837 all the marriages in the congregation are recorded in the Lebanon church book."

- 1795, Aug. 24. Peter Eisenhour and Anna Early.
 Aug. 24. James Raddick.
 Dec. Andreas Albright and Catharine Steiner (widow).
 Anthony Hemperly and Catharine Foght.

 1798, Feb. 18. Benoni Price and Margareta Horstick.
 Feb. 20. John Baumgardner and Elizabeth Keifer.
 April 17. Martin Götz and Salome Neidig.

The baptismal record is arranged under the head of families, of which we give the first:

- Michael Pfantz, b. Oct. 30, 1732; bap. Dec. 4, 1732;
 m. June 3, 1755, Elizabeth Frantz. Their children:
 i. Elizabeth, b. Nov. 30, 1757; bap. Dec. 1, 1757.
 ii. George Michael, July 7, 1760; bap. Dec. 1, 1760.
 iii. Catharine, b. Aug. 14, 1764; bap. Aug. 19, 1764.
 iv. Johan, b. Jan^y 19, 1767; bap. Feb. 2, 1767.
 v. John Jacob, b. Aug. 13, 1769; bap. Aug. 27, 1769.
 vi. Regina, b. Feb. 26, 1772; bap. March 1, 1772.
 vii. Johannas, b. Jan^y 8, 1777; bap. Jan^y 26, 1777.

A valuable record, especially, although not perfectly kept, are the biographical sketches given at the date of death,—facts like the following, which are of exceeding value:

John Adam Deiningger, born April 23, 1722, in Württemberg; son of Leonard Deiningger and his wife Margareta; came to this country in 1732 with his parents; was confirmed in his twenty-sixth year; married Rosina Dillar, who died in 1780; and they had eight children; then married the widow Elizabeth Nasten; no children; he died April 16, 1803, aged eighty years and nine months.

If all church records were kept in this manner, how precious they would become as the years rolled on.

ANNVILLE TOWNSHIP.

AN order of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County was issued at June sessions, 1799, to commissioners to examine and report a line dividing the township of Lebanon, as nearly as might be for the convenience of the people, into two equal parts. To this order the said commission reported the following line of division, to wit:

"Beginning at the line between Bethel township and Lebanon township; thence by lands of Jacob Boltz, John Miller, Adam Heylman, John Heylman, Jr., John Heylman, Michael Kridler, Christian Long, Abraham Long, Herman Long, Peter Forney, John Gingrich, Martin Carmony, Jacob Hegea, John Heiss, Michael Urich, Christian Bachman, and Robert Coleman, Esq., south four degrees east two thousand five hundred and twenty perches, to a marked black-oak, at the line between Londonderry township and the township of Lebanon aforesaid."

This report was confirmed by the court at September sessions, 1799, and it was ordered that it be thereafter designated upon the records of the court by the name of Annaville township. It was so named for the town, which was laid out in 1762, and called by the proprietor "Anwill." On some of the old records the village is designated "Anvil," and hence it is a difficult matter to say whether "Anvil" or "Annaville" was intended.

The assessment-list of the new township is herewith given:

As to the township proper the history of Annville contains little of moment, and the few facts relating to early churches and to schools is given in the townships into which it was divided,—North Annville and South Annville.

NORTH ANNVILLE TOWNSHIP.

THIS township is bounded on the north by East Hanover, on the east by Swatara and North Lebanon, on the south by South Annville and Londonderry, and on the west by East Hanover and Londonderry. At the April session of the court, 1845, divers inhabitants of Annville township petitioned for a division of said township, representing it to be inconveniently large for township purposes, and that it contained about six hundred voters. The petitioners asked for the erection of North Annville township out of Annville, and requested the appointment of commissioners. April 11, 1845, the court appointed Abraham Rex, John Uhler, and Jacob Weidle as such commissioners. July 30, 1845, they reported to the court that they had divided the township as follows:

"Beginning at Killinger's Run, being the dividing-line between Londonderry and Annville townships, where the Berks and Dauphin Turnpike road crosses it, and observing the following courses and distances: North seventy-eight degrees east, five hundred and thirty-six perches, north eighty and a half degrees east three hundred and forty perches, north seventy-six and a half degrees east two hundred and thirty-four perches, and north seventy-nine degrees east, ninety-two perches to the line dividing Lebanon from Annville township, on the land of Jacob Kreider." The commissioners further suggested that the part of Annville township north of said division-line should be called North Annville, and the part lying south thereof should be called South Annville. Dec. 15, 1845, the court confirmed the report absolutely.

far back as 1780. In 1804 the Lutheran and Reformed congregations erected a church and parochial school in Annville village. It was continued all the year round and open to all who wished to avail themselves of its benefits. The instruction was at first altogether in German, but in later years some of the English branches were added. It was taught among others by Messrs. German, Mohler, Matillious, Gerhardt, Fisher, Bachman, Strine, and Todd. It was continued under the supervision of the above-named congregations until 1849, when the property was sold to Daniel Seabold and converted into a dwelling-house in which he still resides. In the early part of the nineteenth century there was a school-house built and a school organized in the northern part of Annville township, on the premises now owned by William Tobias; one in the southern part of the township called the Oakland school, and one where Brightbill's meeting-house now stands. These were all built by individual subscriptions. The Oakland school is still used for school purposes.

HILL CHURCH (BERG KIRCHE).—In North Annville township, and four miles northwest of Lebanon, stands the Hill Church, built in 1733, and in which the Lutherans and Reformed worshiped jointly. In 1754, and thereafter, when the Indians made frequent incursions, people often took their guns with them to defend themselves against the savages. During divine service men with loaded muskets were placed at the door as sentinels. This was the first organization for religious services in what is now Lebanon County, and was the first to erect church buildings. The congregation was formed in 1733, by Rev. Casper Stoever. On the same spot where the first rude edifice was erected the third building now stands, having been built in 1837. According to the first records kept by Rev. Casper Stoever, it was called "the church on the Quittapahilla," so called by him from the fact of his living and having a mill on that stream. Its pastors have been (of Lutheran congregation): 1733-79, John Casper Stoever; 1779-94, Frederick Theodore Welsheimer; 1794-1815, John George Lochman, D.D.; 1815-36, William G. Ernst; 1836, Jonathan Ruthrauff, A. C. Wedekind, D.D., C. Feltzer, George Weaver, and J. M. Deitzler, the present incumbent. Touching the "Berg Kirche," the Rev. John George Lochman, D.D., speaking of churches in Lebanon County in 1812, says, "Unter diesen ist die Berg kirche Gemeine, die aelteste. Schon im Jahr 1733 ist sie gessamlet worden, zu einer Zeit, da die Indianer noch haeufige Einfalle in die Gegend machten und mordeten, Herr J. C. Stoever war zu der Zeit Prediger, und nahm sich der verstreuten Schafen an, Man kam zusammen, nahm ein vacantes stueck Land auf, und baueete eine hoelzerne kirche. TOWN OF ANNVILLE.

The town of Annville, lying in the townships of North and South Annville, is an important station on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, six miles distant from Lebanon. It was laid out by Abraham Miller, the eldest son of Andrew Miller, an early settler, in 1762, and by him named "Annwill," although for almost a century it went by the name of Millerstown. Messrs. Martin Ulrich and Adam Reigel, it is stated, who owned land adjoining Miller, subsequently laid out additions to the town. Adam Reigel, the person above referred to, erected at an early date three mills on the Quitopahilla, which are now known as David Kreider's, Bachman's, and Boyer's mills.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—In 1804 members of the Lutheran congregation worshipping in the Hill Church, who lived at and near Annville, concluded to organize a church at home, and accordingly, in conjunction with members of the Reformed denomination, erected a fine stone church upon a lot donated by Martin Ulrich and Adam Reigel. The two congregations worshiped in the edifice until 1872, when the Reformed organization purchased the interest of the Lutherans in the property for three thousand dollars, and the latter accordingly erected the structure they now occupy. It cost ten thousand dollars. Mr. J. D. Biever, one of the members of the church, donated the parsonage during his lifetime, and left three thousand dollars by his will for the erection of a "sexton's" house. Mr. Biever was a valued and faithful member of the church. For forty years he was the Sunday-school superintendent, and rarely missed a session, while for about fifty years he assumed a directing and sustaining influence in the congregation. The pastoral succession is given as follows: Revs. George Lochman, William Ernest, Jonathan Ruthrauff, William Ernst, G. F. Krotel, H. S. Miller, U. S. Poor, Samuel Fetzger, George Weaver, J. M. Deitzler. Mr. Deitzler, the present pastor, was born in Schuylkill County, and entered the ministry in 1844. In 1865 he took charge of the Annville Church, and has maintained the connection to this time without interruption. To the congregation of this church Mrs. Rebecca, widow of the late John D. Biever, built and gave an elegant brick parsonage, and also a commodious residence for the sexton.

CHRIST REFORMED CHURCH.—The history of the Lutheran Church, at Annville, has shown how certain members of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations, worshipping at the Hill Church, joined for the purpose of erecting a church building at Annville. The work was consummated in 1804, and from that date the Annville Reformed Church marks its beginning. In 1872 the Lutherans disposed of their interest in the property to the Reformed organization, and since that year the latter have had exclusive possession. The first pastor of whom the records speak was Rev. William Hiester, brother to the present pastor's grandfather. Mr. Hiester was the pastor in 1807, and perhaps before. His successors were Revs. Henry Groh (1823 to 1834), Henry Wagner (1835 to 1851), F. W. Kremer (1851 to 1852), and Jonathan E. Hiester (1852 to 1883). Rev. Jonathan E. Hiester was born in Berks County, studied for the ministry at Myerstown and Mercersburg, and for his field entered upon the Annville charge in 1852. He had five congregations when he began, and since 1852 has preached steadily for the churches at Annville, Palmyra, Campbellstown, and North Annville. His charges aggregate a membership of four hundred and sixty. The Annville Church has about one hundred and sixty. The elders are Daniel Stine and Philip Boltz; the deacons, William S. Seabold, George W. Stine, E. G. Ulrich, and John Shenk; and trustees, J. L. Saylor, James S. Killinger, and H. B. Bodenhorn.

THE OLD REFORMED AND LUTHERAN BURYING-GROUND is situated just opposite the Reformed Church. This cemetery is the oldest in the town, and herein are buried the following:

UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH OF ANNVILLE.—According to the journal of Rev. Jacob Erb, then a preacher on the Lancaster United Brethren Circuit (extending from Harrisburg to Lancaster, and embracing twenty preaching-points), there was a stone church near the present Killinger mill as far back as 1823, and in that church members of the United Brethren faith assembled for worship once each month. Although United Brethren worship was held at Annville before his coming, it is believed no class was formed until he organized one in 1823. The present church was erected in 1860. The trustees are Rudolph Herr, Peter Graybill, and Israel Gruber.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH.—This church was organized in 1841, and in 1842 a house of worship was built. In 1874 it was made a mission, and in 1877 a station. The membership is now one hundred and seventy-three. The trustees are S. R. Light, Peter F. Houser, William Nye, J. M. Smith, and Henry Blauch.

CHURCH OF GOD.—This church, organized in 1835 with about forty members, has declined in strength, and numbers now not more than one-fourth of forty. Preaching is held once a fortnight. The trustee is J. H. Redsecker.

THE UNION CEMETERY, controlled by St. Paul's Lutheran Church of Annville, lies just north of Annville beyond the railroad. Among those interred therein are the following:

ANNVILLE ACADEMY was established in 1834. This was a private institution, founded by John Shertzer, Adam Ulrich, Leonard Heilig, Daniel Strupenhauer, and others, who employed the instructors and had sole supervision of all pertaining to the school. It was well patronized, at first only by the citizens of Annnville and vicinity, but subsequently receiving students from other States, especially from the South. The academy was first taught by Jacob Livengood, of Reading; afterwards by Mr. Willoughby, of Connecticut, with Miss Rohrer, of Lancaster, as assistant; next by Mr. Andrews, with Miss Howe as assistant, both of Connecticut; after this by the following in the order named: Simon Andrews, W. J. Burnside, Daniel Balsbaugh, Cyrus Boger, J. S. Krumbein, Professor Hunt, of New York City; and last by Professor Macheth, of Elizabeth, N. J. In 1859 the old academy building, which had been purchased by Professor Balsbaugh, who had charge of the school at that time, was torn down, and a large three-story brick building erected, large enough to accommodate the increasing number of students who flocked here from all parts of the country. The school was never in a more flourishing condition than at this period, when its very efficient head, Professor Balsbaugh, was called away by death. The property was then sold and bought by a number of citizens of Annnville, among whom were George Rigler, John Bachman, Jacob Shertzer, and others, and the school continued under their supervision by the teachers above named until 1865. That year the property was sold, and passed into the control of the East Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren Church, to whom it was donated by Rudolph Herr, John H. Kinports, George A. Mark, L. W. Craumer, George W. Hoerverter, and others, citizens of Annnville, and out of which grew Lebanon Valley College.

LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE.—This institution of learning is located at Annnville. The college edifice comprises two large brick structures and a frame building. These are provided with modern improvements, and capable of accommodating a large number of students. There is also a fine campus of about six acres. The ladies' hall is entirely separate from the other premises, and is in charge of the lady principal. The north college building is used for recitation-rooms and dormitories for male students. It also contains the chapel and society halls. The new building is used for the library and for the departments of art and science. The college library contains about two thousand volumes, and is constantly increasing. The libraries of the literary societies also comprise a respectable number of well-selected and standard books. The cabinet contains a collection of specimens in mineralogy, geology, and natural history. There is a reading-room in connection with the college, and also a gymnasium.

The curriculum of the college embraces two courses of study,—the classical and the scientific. The classical course requires four years, in addition to two years of preparatory, for completion, and the scientific four years, with one year of preparatory. The studies laid down in these departments are such as experience has proved efficient in securing a full and harmonious development of all the intellectual faculties, and in furnishing the student with first principles, and with an intelligent outline of those branches of knowledge with which every well-educated person should be to some extent acquainted, and also to impart a general information on all practical subjects. It is, therefore, a leading object to bring in exercise, in just proportion, all those powers by which the mind may become prepared to acquire knowledge rapidly, and use it to the best possible advantage.

There is also a department of music. The course of instruction in either piano or voice occupies three years.

Those students who in the collegiate department complete the studies of the classical course and pass a satisfactory examination, receive the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The degree of Bachelor of Science is conferred in course on those who complete the scientific course and pass an approved examination. The degree of Master of Arts is, on application, conferred on any Bachelor of Arts who has, for at least three years after his graduation, devoted himself to literary or professional pursuits, and has, during the same time, sustained a good moral character.

The college is under the patronage of the Pennsylvania, East Pennsylvania, East German, Virginia, and Allegheny Annual Conferences of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. Each Conference has six trustees, and hence the board of trustees is composed of thirty members.

In 1865, at an annual session of the East Pennsylvania Conference, held at Lebanon, it was decided to locate a school of learning somewhere within her limits, or with the bounds of the Pennsylvania Conference. Committees appointed respectively by both Conferences met during the year. When the East Pennsylvania Conference met again next year, 1866, at Columbia, Pa., the following action was taken:

First. To establish a school of high grade, for the education of young men and young women, said school to be under the direction and supervision of trustees elected by the Conference.

Second. To accept for this purpose the grounds and building of what was then known as Annville Academy, located at Annville, Lebanon Co., Pa., and which property was offered as a free gift to the Conference by Messrs. Rudolph Herr, John H. Kinports, George A. Mark, L. W. Craumer, George W. Hoverter, and other citizens of Annville, on condition that the Conference establish and maintain forever an institution of learning of high grade.

Third. To appoint the Rev. G. W. M. Rigor, with such assistants as he may need, to take charge of the school for the ensuing year. The school was opened in May, 1866, and during the year was attended by one hundred and fifty-three students. During the following year a liberal charter was granted by the State Legislature for the establishment of this institution under the name and title of Lebanon Valley College, signed by Governor John W. Geary on the 7th day of April, 1867.

In the month of March in this same year the East Pennsylvania Conference appropriated twenty-five thousand dollars to purchase more ground and to erect the North College building.

A faculty was organized under the charter. Rev. Thomas R. Vickroy, A.M., was chosen president of the college, and Professor E. Benjamin Bierman, A.M., principal of the normal department. On the 23d of August, 1867, the corner-stone of the new building was laid with appropriate ceremonies. A very interesting address was delivered by the Hon. J. P. Wickersham, State Superintendent of Public Instruction. In 1871, Professor Lucian H. Hammond, A.M., who for several years before had charge of the department of ancient languages and literature, was elected president. He filled the place ably till 1876, when failing health compelled him to resign, and several months after he died. Rev. David D. De Long was chosen to fill the presidency on the resignation of President Hammond.

The college sent out its first class of graduates in 1870, and up to this year (1883) has graduated sixty-seven young men and thirty-one ladies. At this time the college has the following departments and instructors: Rev. D. D. De Long, A.M., president and professor of Mental and Moral Science; Rev. Daniel Eberly, A.M., professor of Latin Language and Literature; E. K. De Long, A.M., professor of Greek Language and Literature; H. C. Deaner, A.M., professor of Mathematics and Astronomy; W. J. Zuck, A.M., professor of English Language and Literature; George Bowman, A.M., professor of Natural Science; S. Eva Pease, Instrumental Music and Voice Culture; Emma L. Landis, M.A., preceptress, French and the Fine Arts; Ida Zent, assistant in music; and J. H. Miller, German and Book-keeping.

The influence of the college is increasing, and its friends manifest an interest which is certain to insure its permanent success.

ANNVILLE NATIONAL BANK.—The Savings and Deposit Bank of Annville was chartered in 1873, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars and authorization to increase it to one hundred thousand dollars. John H. Kinports was the president, Samuel L. Brightbill the cashier, and G. W. Stine the teller. Jan. 10, 1877, G. W. Stine was appointed cashier. May 17, 1878, the institution obtained a charter as a national bank. The directors in 1882 were John H. Kinports (president), Andrew Kreider (vice-president), H. H. Kreider, George Rigler, Isaac Baker, Simon Fleisher, and Henry Gingrich.

ANNVILLE GAZETTE.—The journal now known as the Annville Gazette was founded in Palmyra in 1878 by J. M. Hoffa, who, on the 15th of November, issued the initial number of the Palmyra Gazette. At the end of a year Hoffa sold the paper to George A. Fleming, who transferred it to Annville. It is a six-column journal, is published every Saturday, and aims at independence in politics.

THE UNION WATER-WORKS are in the northern part of the township, at the junction of the Union Canal and Swatara River, near the East Hanover township line. These works supply the summit with water pumped out of the Swatara, and carried several miles through a feeder. Around them has grown up quite a village. The United Brethren have a meeting-house here. The place contains a hotel, store, several shops and warehouses.

BELLEVUE is situated about a mile west of the Union Water-works, and contains a hotel, store, and several residences. It has three churches,—Bellevue, Lutheran and Reformed, and United Brethren.

KAUFMAN'S MEETING-HOUSE is located one and a half miles north of Annville, in a region early settled by the Fasnachts, Myers, Shirks, Ellenbergers, Emrichs, Lights, Shorts, Yengsts, Maulfairs, and Brightbills.

THE MENNONITE MEETING-HOUSE is one mile east of Union Water-works, in the vicinity settled by the Kreiders, Helms, Reists, Kochenbergers, Fenslers, Millers, Gingrichs, Hersbergers, Heilmans, Tobiasess, Bogers, Lights, Moyers, and Ruppss.

MOUNT ZION METHODIST MEETING-HOUSE is located one mile north of Bellevue, in a section settled by the Runkels, Kreiders, Sherks, Forneys, Hoffmans, and Knolls.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH is situated a mile and a half southwest of Bellevue, not far from the Annville Mills. The early settlers near it were the Snavelys, Millers, Allemans, Enrichs, Snokes, Shaffners, Moyers, Plauchs, Runkels, Walmers, Houtzes, and Walborns.

HERSEY'S MEETING-HOUSE (Dunkard) is a neat stone edifice, built in 1858, and located three-fourths of a mile west from Annville. Adjoining the meeting-house is a cemetery in which the following-named persons were buried :

- Blaugh, Anna (Bender), (w. of S. B.), b. Dec. 14, 1867; d. July 2, 1879.
- Bender, Jacob, b. July 24, 1812; d. Dec. 31, 1878.
- Knoll, John, b. Sept. 8, 1797; d. March 12, 1874.
- Knoll, Elizabeth (w. of J. K.), b. June 12, 1796; d. Feb. 7, 1873.
- Kuhling, Dietrich, b. March 3, 1787; d. April 23, 1873.
- Kuhling, Wilhelmina (w. of D. K.), d. Aug. 7, 1869, aged 83.
- Knoll, Elizabeth, b. Dec. 26, 1840; d. Sept. 21, 1864.
- Nase, John, b. Aug. 26, 1824; d. Nov. 5, 1870.
- Messinger, Christoph, b. Sept. 20, 1820; d. June 12, 1872.
- Price, Frances (Gatwale), (w. of T. P.), b. March 22, 1829; d. Feb. 8, 1875.
- Sprigler, Peter W. (s. of J. and C. S.), b. Aug. 27, 1849; d. Dec. 17, 1871.
- Turpie, Mary (Light), (w. of W. T.), b. July 19, 1816; d. March 2, 1878.
- Yordy, Jacob, b. Oct. 14, 1790; d. May 26, 1847.

SOUTH ANNVILLE TOWNSHIP.

THE township of South Annville was erected in 1845, by a division of Annville township proper. It is bounded on the north by North Annville township, on the east by Cornwall, and on the south and west by Londonderry. Some of the finest and best improved lands and farms in the county are to be found in its limits. Many firm, substantial farm-houses and barns, principally of stone, indicative of wealth and taste, can be seen here and there, and some old tile-covered houses are to be found. The Quitopahilla Creek takes its course through this and North Annville townships, and, before emptying into the Swatara, forms, for some distance, the boundary between North Annville and Londonderry. It receives the waters of Killinger's Run, an important stream flowing north-westward through the centre of the township. The original settlers were principally Scotch-Irish, with some German families in the eastern part.

The township includes a portion of Annville village, and hence the majority of those on the following assessment-list were inhabitants of that town. Much of its history also is connected with that given in the preceding sketch, save what is herewith presented.

Apart from the town of Annnville there are few villages in South Annnville township deserving the name. Here and there in the township, as throughout the county, are clusters of houses which have a designation. Among these

SPORTING HILL, sometimes called Hinkletown, is located on the turnpike between Lebanon and Annnville. In an old cemetery there are buried the following:

- Bernhart, Barbara, b. Sept. 12, 1784; d. May 10, 1855.
- Dietrick, Hannah (w. of P.), b. in 1791; d. Nov. 4, 1820.
- Dietrick, Isaac, b. in 1820; d. Dec. 8, 1825.
- Kreider, Jacob, b. Sept. 11, 1808; d. Feb. 4, 1870.
- Long, Barbara (w. of Joseph), b. Nov. 29, 1794; d. Feb. 14, 1875.
- Long, Christian, b. March 31, 1752; d. Feb. 8, 1829.
- Loog, Elizabeth, b. in 1786; d. Aug. 23, 1812.
- Loog, Elizabeth, b. March 11, 1815; d. July 18, 1830.
- Loog, Elizabeth (w. of John), b. in 1787; d. Nov. 17, 1821.
- Loog, Esther (w. of C.), b. in 1757; d. Aug. 1, 1798.
- Loog, Joseph, b. Jan. 7, 1789; d. April 10, 1864.
- Stegler, Joseph, b. Jan. 7, 1732; d. Aug. 7, 1833.

FONTANA POST-OFFICE is in the southeastern part of the township. In and around it reside the Bachmans, Gingrichs, Earlys, and others, descendants of early settlers.

THE UNITED BRETHREN have a church on the Horseshoe Pike, two miles east of Campbellstown, in a region early settled by the Herrs, Bowmans, Brightbills, Burkholders, Foltzes, Gingrichs, Marquarts, Imbodens, Shenks, Bruners, and Westenbergers.

THE EVANGELICAL CHURCH is a two-story stone and brick edifice. In the graveyard adjoining are interred the following:

- Bricker, William (s. of P. and M.), b. July 23, 1846; d. July 14, 1868.
- Bricker, Philip, b. July 30, 1826; d. Jan. 20, 1881.
- Bender, Catharine (w. of J. B.), b. May 16, 1814; d. May 23, 1851.
- Blecher, Elizabeth, b. June 4, 1822; d. July 23, 1851.
- Dietrick, Philip (s. of P. and E. D.), b. March 27, 1835; d. Dec. 12, 1855.
- Dietrick, John William, d. March 15, 1853, aged 28.
- Grabill, Magdalena, b. Dec. 5, 1798; d. Sept. 2, 1859.
- Gilbert, Lewis, b. Aug. 8, 1792; d. Nov. 16, 1864.
- Gilbert, Maria (Sbaffer), b. June 14, 1793; d. Feb. 14, 1857.
- Gilbert, John Frederick (s. of L. and M.), b. Aug. 3, 1826; d. Jan. 8, 1853.
- Hannah, Caroline (d. of L. and M. H.), d. April 30, 1863, aged 24.
- Miller, Christian, b. April 12, 1813; d. May 4, 1847.
- Miller, Elizabeth, b. Jan. 18, 1812; d. May 13, 1870.
- Miller, Maria (w. of W. M.), b. April 1, 1822; d. Oct. 14, 1843.
- Seshold, Catharine (w. of J. S.), b. Aug. 8, 1812; d. Nov. 21, 1846.
- Weirich, Elizabeth (Lawry, w. of J. W.), b. May 19, 1820; d. March 12, 1867.
- Xanter, Susanna (Dietrick, w. of P. X.), b. Jan. 19, 1817; d. Jan. 30, 1859.

THE UNION BETHEL (Church of God) is a one-story stone structure erected in 1842. In the graveyard attached the following are interred:

- Collins, Martha, b. April 11, 1829; d. Nov. 26, 1861.
- Collins, Margaret, b. June 10, 1828; d. May 6, 1863.
- Sander, Nancy Ann, b. April 14, 1847; d. April 22, 1867.
- Short, Catharine, b. Dec. 18, 1820; d. Feb. 7, 1863.
- Seshold, David, b. Sept. 21, 1817; d. Nov. 3, 1858.
- Uhier, Mary Magdalena, b. May 31, 1803; d. Oct. 3, 1851.

GENEALOGICAL HISTORY.

[We have endeavored to preserve the records of all the early prominent families of Lebanon County, but with what success those which follow go to show. The wills, administration papers, and deeds have furnished us most of the information. In several instances where we have made repeated application for genealogical data, so as to perfect our records, our letters remain unanswered, or a negative reply was received. We believe but one printed genealogy of a Lebanon County family has been issued, and that relates to the Shuey's. Owing to this fact we have omitted reference to that family in our genealogical register.]

THE ACHEY FAMILY.

Among the Norman soldiers who went with William the Conqueror to England in the year 1066, the Dooomsday-Book preserves several by the name of Ache, and a coat-of-arms attests Devonshire as the region of their settlement. Among those remaining in Normandy, there were some, at a later period, connected with the army and navy of France, and at the time of King Henry IV., who issued the Edict of Nantes, they stood high in royal favor. Two coats-of-arms were conferred upon members of the family, and one "Ache (Achey) de Larry, Normandy," has this device, "Bellica Virtus,"—valor in war. They were Huguenots, and in one of the religious persecutions in France one of the family was killed, after which his wife, with three children and her brother, fled to Switzerland, then to Germany, whence, after her death, the three sons came to America, landing Sept. 22, 1752. (Rupp's 30,000 Names, p. 276.) Another branch of the family, during the same persecutions, took refuge in an English vessel, and Rev. John H. Aughey, of Dallas, W. Va., author of the "Iron Furnace of Secession and Slavery," traces his descent through Scotland to this same dispersion. Others having adopted the Catholic religion remained undisturbed. A biographical French work gives Count Achey French vice-admiral, 1716-1775. The three brothers who came to America were named Johan Ludwig, Hermanus, and Johannes Jacob. The signature of the first named, John Lewis Ache, is in smooth bold Roman characters, plainly declaring his French education. He was sent to the Philadelphia Academy at the expense of the Proprietaries to be better qualified in the English language, for it had been determined that as he "came well recommended he should be school-master" at Vincent, in Chester County, where the Lutheran and Reformed Churches wanted a school started under the fostering care of the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts." (Life of Dr. William Smith, vol. i. p. 89 and 93.) This was in May, 1755. A year later we find him in a military company raised for defense against the Indians. Tradition says he had some dispute about church matters with the managers of the "Hoch Shule," where he was teaching French and German, and he then removed from the city. Perhaps the trouble was the "scheme" spoken of by Dr. Smith (Pu. Arch., N. S., vol. vi. p. 458), to scoop all the German Lutherans into "the church," probably by means of the society's schools, and which he was "sure would easily take effect." The oldest tax-list of Tulpehocken township, Berks Co., still preserved, shows that John Ache owned land there in 1759, and he appears regularly on the lists until 1774, in which year he purchased a farm about a mile and a half from Linglestown, and eight miles from Harrisburg, on which he lived until his death, in 1792. In 1787 he sold about half of this tract to his son, Henry, and in 1792 he sold the remainder to Jacob Blank. The tract was warranted to Andrew Caldwell, and is now owned by Rev. Simou Mower, Lawrence Hogert, and others.

There was a history of the family extending back over several hundred years, written in Latin, French, and some German, which is now lost, so far as known. John Ache kept the heraldic ensign, with the motto above given painted on his furniture, carriages, etc. He is described as having been a learned man and a great reader, strict in his habits and requirements, taking much interest in the culture of fruit and in bees; as a naturalist, spending much time in the study of animals, birds, and insects; as a leader in religious meetings; and as a friend of the Indians, being very intimate with some of them. He had a house of seven rooms, all in a row on the ground floor, in one of which he kept his "books and curious things," and had a cabinet collection, which he afterwards sold to an academy in Philadelphia. One of his sayings is well worthy of remembrance, "To serve man right is to serve God best." He was married twice, and had a son by the second wife, who went to the Holstein River, in Tennessee. By the census of 1790 he seems to have had another son and two daughters, or had such children adopted in his family. The county records of Berks, Lancaster, and Dauphin show great variations in spelling this name: Ache, Achey, Acha, Achi, Achia, Achie, Acke, Ackie, Ackee, Aikey, Aggy, Auge, Oachy, Othey, Aoke, Achan, Achin, Aukey, Aucha, Auchy, Auchey, Aughe, Aughey, and others. Henry Aughey, as the name finally took a permanent form in Juniata County, was born in Tulpehocken township, Jan. 26, 1759, and was married to Elizabeth Shuey, daughter of John Shuey, of West Hanover, son of Daniel, of Bethel, who came to Pennsylvania in 1732, and was also a Huguenot, the name being properly Shu-é, like Ach-é. (See Shuey genealogy.) John Shuey had a son, Conrad, called after his mother, a daughter of George Conrad, of Heidelberg, who died in 1765. Caleb Graydon took up a tract of land opposite, and a little above Mifflintown, which he sold to his neighbor, Conrad Shuey, who moved upon it in 1793, and through him his brother-in-law, Henry Aughey, was induced to buy a farm in the same township; but just before he moved his wife died, and was buried at the Lutheran Church in Linglestown. A few years afterwards he came back, and married Mary Magdalena Felty, who bore one son, Samuel, still living, and is the father of Rev. Professor Aughey, LL.D., of the State University of Nebraska at Lincoln, and one of the most eminent and reliable scientists of this country. His works on the fauna and flora, on the geology and physical geography of Nebraska, and on the grasshopper and many other subjects prove him to be a wonderfully close observer and an original investigator of no mean ability. Among the children of the first wife were: Elizabeth, married Daniel Hoover; Catharine, married Jacob Partner; Susanna, married Jacob Heckman. These husbands all came from Dauphin County. Heckman died in Centre; Hoover, in Venango, in 1871, aged over ninety-one years. He is blamed with having destroyed the Achey family history. Another daughter, Mary M., married Abraham Guss, of a family from Chester County, whose grandfather succeeded John Ache in teaching school in the same church building in Vincent. This introduces Professor A. L. Guss, of Huntingdon, Pa., now Washington, D. C., not unknown to many of our historical readers. He is a son of the above, and has written considerably on the early settlers of Juniata County and on the Indians of the interior of the State.

Henry Ache lived in Heidelberg township, some six miles east of Lebanon, and about the time of the Revolutionary war was one of its heaviest tax-payers. From the location of his residence and the time of his death, he must have been the brother of John Lewis, who signed himself Hermanus, a Latinized form of Herman; but why, how, and when it was changed to Henry is unknown, but such changes in those days were not at all uncommon, and Herman could easily glide into Heinrich. He had a tract of land patented in 1776, and he called it "Acham," evidently having some relation to his name. This, with the form Achen, reminds us of Aachen, the fountains, the old name of Aix-la-Chapelle. The great naturalist, Louis Agassiz, under date of Oct. 1, 1872, wrote Professor S. Aughey concerning the common origin of their names: "My name is a corruption from Auge (pronounced originally Auzhe). Some families of Huguenots in French Switzerland spelled their name interchangeably Ache and Auge. My name, however, came from that by a localism (a patois) by an earlier emigration of the clans than the Huguenot dispersion. Owing to these facts, it strikes me as extremely probable that we sprang originally from the same clans." Ache in French signifies a species of water parsley or celery. One kind, known in Latin as apium, was especially loved by bees, and another variety was used to make the wreaths with which victors were crowned in Grecian games. The family may have taken the name either from the fragrant garlands in some honor bestowed, or because they were lovers of bees, a singular characteristic that marks pretty much all the descendants to this day. Henry Ache, of Heidelberg, died in 1786. His children seem to have been Henry, by a first wife, and by the second wife, Catharine, Samuel, and the following under age at the time of his death: Jacob, Elizabeth, George, Susanna, Thomas, John, Christian, Peter, and Sophia. Henry died in 1808. Samuel married Elizabeth Albright, daughter of George, of Heidelberg. Jacob was captain of a company in the war of 1812. (Pa. Arch., N. S., vol. xii. p. 3.) After the war he went to New Orleans, and was never heard from afterwards. John married a Hoover, and they are the parents of John H. Achey, president of the First National Bank of Dayton, Ohio. John P. Achey, son of Peter, also lives in Dayton. Thomas married Christina Stichel, of Shaefferstown, where he died in 1826. His children were John, died at Oley; Christiana, married — Holder; Samuel, married Ann Egle, of Henry; Catharine; Thomas, died 1879, at Myerstown; Henry, married — Ryder, died in Philadelphia; Peter, learned carpenter trade with uncle, Capt. Jacob; Charles, married — Foltz, of Lancaster, where he died in 1838; Anthony, drowned near Lancaster; Frederick, leather-dresser and merchant in Baltimore; Lydia, married — Raber, of Lykens Valley; and Filbert, died unmarried. There are quite a number of the Achey (Aughey) family still living in various places.

THE BACHMAN FAMILY.

By reference to our genealogical register, notes are found concerning the family of Michael Baughman, or Bachman. We are of the opinion that the family herewith given is descended therefrom, that John Bachman was a son of Michael Bachman before referred to. Being unable, however, to connect them, we have separated them.

- I. JOHN BACHMAN, b. Nov. 10, 1729; d. Feb. 15, 1806; m. MARIA HERR, b. Dec. 25, 1730; d. Oct. 28, 1815. They had issue:

THE COLEMAN FAMILY.

[We were promised a full record of this prominent and influential family, but at the last moment are compelled to give just such data as have come to our hands. In the chain of title to the Cornwall estate, and the historic accounts connected therewith, frequent reference is made relating to the family.]

I. ROBERT COLEMAN emigrated from Donaghmore, Ireland, and came to Lancaster County, Pa., where he found employment with Peter Grubb, proprietor of Hopewell Forge, about 1765. One of his fellow-workmen desiring an order to be written, requested Coleman to write it, and when Grubb saw it he inquired concerning the penman, and being told, sent for Coleman, and gave him the position of book-keeper at thirty dollars per year. This was on the 22d of February, 1769. Afterwards, when Elizabeth Furnace was sold as the property of Baron Steigel, Robert Coleman was employed as manager. It was not long before he attained a share in the establishment, and finally became possessor of the entire interest in the furnace. By his energy and indomitable perseverance he became the most successful iron-master in Lancaster County. To an untiring industry and judicious management he united the utmost probity and regularity in his dealings, and to him Lebanon County especially is indebted for the celebrity it has acquired from the number and magnitude of its iron-works and the excellence of its manufactures. Mr. Coleman was elected to the General Assembly in 1788, and served a long time as one of the associate judges of Lancaster County. His children were:

i. William.

2. ii. James.

3. iii. Edward.

4. iv. Thomas Bird.

II. JAMES COLEMAN (Robert), m. Miss Dawson, of Philadelphia, and had issue:

5. i. George Dawson, b. Jan. 12, 1825; m. Deborah Brown.

ii. Ann.

iii. Sarah.

iv. Harriet.

v. Robert.

III. EDWARD COLEMAN (Robert) was an enterprising citizen, and it was chiefly owing to his energy that the famous Conestoga navigation was made a success. He stood high among his fellow-citizens, and was honored with numerous public trusts. He was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of ¹ ELIZABETH REIST, daughter of Christian Reist. He was b. Jan. 8, 1779, in Lancaster County, Pa.; d. July 20, 1852; m. Catharine Kreider, b. Sept. 1, 1792; d. July 15, 1823.

Representatives in 1818 and 1819 from Lancaster County, and in 1820 chosen to the State Senate, and re-elected to a second term in the same body.

IV. THOMAS BIRD COLEMAN (Robert); of men, humane and charitable. His wife d. 1830; a woman of rare excellence of character, abounding in Christian virtues, and whose memory is exceeding precious. They had issue:

- i. Annie C.
- ii. Sarah H.
- iii. Isabella; d. unm.
- iv. Robert W.; d. unm.
- v. William; m., and had Robert H. and Annie.

V. GEORGE DAWSON COLEMAN (James, Robert), b. Jan. 12, 1825; d. Sept. 9, 1878 (see biographical sketch); m. Jan. 13, 1852, DEBORAH BROWN, daughter of William Brown and Deborah Norris, of Philadelphia. They had issue:

- i. Robert; d. s. p.
- ii. Harriet; d. s. p.
- iii. Debbie Norris; m. Horace Brock, and had John Penn.

iv. Sarah; m. Arthur Brock, and had Julia and Frances.

- v. James.
- vi. Frances.
- vii. William; d. s. p.
- viii. Bertram Dawson.
- ix. Edward.
- x. Annie.

THE FAMILY OF EARLY.

I. JOHN EARLY (Johannes Oehrly) was a native of Jesingen, in the kingdom of Württemberg, Germany, where he was born Jan. 9, 1724. He was the son of Thomas and Margaret Early, and the sponsors at his baptism were George Spitz and Anna Algayer. He emigrated to America in 1750, arriving at Philadelphia, where he took the oath of allegiance to English rule on the 24th of August that year. He was a carpenter by trade, and at first stopped at Reading, probably for employment, but he subsequently secured the title to a large tract of land in then Derry township, Lancaster Co., called "Betimes," on which he resided until his death. He died Sept. 19, 1796, and was buried at Bindnagel's Church, on the south bank of the Swatara.

Mr. Early was twice married; first in 1753 to SUSANNA BRUMBEACH, who died in 1754. They had:

2. i. Christian, b. June 13, 1754; m. Elizabeth Killinger.

He married secondly, March 10, 1756, REGINA (Rachel) LICHELE, daughter of Albrecht and Eva Elizabeth Lichele. They had issue:

3. ii. John, b. July 31, 1757; m. Margaretta —.
- iii. John William, b. Aug. 10, 1763; known in the family tradition as "der Willem;" removed to the Western country, accompanied by one of Mr.

Bindnagel's sons, whose farm adjoined John Early's on the north. It is stated that he finally settled near Akron, Ohio, where many of his descendants were living, although he first removed to the Virginia Valley.

iv. Thomas, b. Nov. 4, 1767; m. Sabina —, removed to Western Pennsylvania, and left numerous descendants.

v. Katrina, b. July 7, 1772.

vi. Anna Margaretha, b. Feb. 29, 1779; m., in 1795, Peter Eisenhauer.

II. CHRISTIAN EARLY (John, Thomas), b. June 13, 1754, at Reading, Berks Co., Pa.; d. Aug. 8, 1803, in East Hanover twp., Lebanon Co., Penna.; m., in 1779, ELIZABETH KILLINGER, daughter of Michael and Catharine Killinger. They had fourteen children, five of whom died young, nine only living at the time of their father's death:

i. Christian, b. Aug. 13, 1780; bap. Sept. 3, 1780; sponsors, John Early and wife Regina.

ii. John, b. Feb. 18, 1783; bap. March 23, 1783; sponsors, Jacob Lichele and wife Eunice; d. s. p.

iii. Anna Catharine, b. May 13, 1784; bap. June 27, 1784; sponsors, Michael Killinger and wife Catharine.

iv. George, b. 1786.

v. Susanna, b. 1789.

vi. Elizabeth, b. 1792.

vii. Christian, b. Jan. 1, 1795; d. s. p.

viii. Jacob, b. April 5, 1796.

ix. Regina [Rachel], b. Feb. 18, 1799; bap. March 31, 1799; sponsors, Jacob Lentz and wife.

x. Thomas, b. March 29, 1801; bap. May 10, 1801; sponsors, Thomas Early and wife.

xi. Margaretta, b. June 12, 1803; bap. June 31, 1803.

III. JOHN EARLY (John, Thomas), b. July 31, 1757, in Londonderry twp., then Lancaster County, Penna.; m. MARGARETTA —; d. December, 1811. They had issue:

i. Magdalena, b. Feb. 24, 1778; m. John Earnest (Erust), near Hummelstown. They were the parents of Obed Earnest and the wife of Henry Bomberger, and the grandparents of Rev. John A. Earnest, of Rhinebeck, N. Y., and Prof. D. H. E. La Ross, formerly county superintendent of schools for Dauphin County.

4. ii. John Jacob, b. Dec. 12, 1779; m. Elizabeth Kramer.

5. iii. John William, b. March 5, 1782; m. 1st, Catharine Hershey; 2d, Christina Kreider.

THE GLEIM FAMILY.

I. GEORGE CHRISTIAN GLEIM, a native of Germany, born April 7, 1736, came to America prior to the war for independence. His father, Rev. John Godfried Gleim, in 1753, was located at Wiesbaden, Germany, where he met Caspar Fahnstock, the ancestor of the family of that name, who had been deputed by Drs. Mublenberg, Passavant, and others, to induce Protestant divines to come to America. The following year he came to Pennsylvania, and preached at Germantown until his death, in 1757. With Weiser, Matthias, and others, he published a work entitled "The Inspired." His son, George Christian Gleim, was an active participant in the Revolution, and in one of the skirmishes around Philadelphia was severely wounded in his head and face by the sabre of a British dragoon. In 1779 he removed to New Holland, Lancaster Co., where he resided until his death, July 21, 1817, aged eighty-one years. He married Anna Maria Matthias, of Germantown, and their children were:

THE HEILMAN FAMILY.

I. From a brief record of the Heilman family we learn that the Heilmans trace their ancestry from "Veit the Heilman," who about the year 1305 obtained from the Emperor Albricht the honor of knighthood and a nobility diploma; thence down to the sixteenth century the name is found in the German Genealogical Register. The first of the name, however, of whom we have any definite record was JOHN JACOB HEILMAN, of Zutzenhausen, in the Palatinate, Germany. He came to America in 1732, and settled in then Lancaster County, in what is now Lebanon township. He died there in 1753, leaving a wife ANNA MARIA, and among others the following children:

- 2. i. John Adam, bap. Feb. 24, 1715; m. Maria Catharine Steger.
- 3. ii. Peter; m. and left issue.
- iii. Anastatius; of him we have no record whatever.

According to the record in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, among those emigrants who were over sixteen years of age and who took the oath of allegiance to the Province and the British Crown on their arrival, we find the following:

- Johannes Heilman in September, 1732.
- Martin Heilman in September, 1732.
- John Peter Heilman in August, 1732.
- Andrew Heilman in September, 1736.
- Hans Adam Heilman in September, 1738.
- Johannes Heilman in September, 1749.
- Conrad Heilman in September, 1752.
- Christian Heilman in September, 1753.
- Martin Heilman in October, 1764.

We are aware that no relationship is acknowledged between the descendants of John Adam Heilman and Peter Heilman, the latter of course being John Peter Heilman; but in the administration account of John Jacob Heilman, of Lebanon township, who died in 1753, three children are mentioned, and a thorough examination of the deeds and administration accounts will no doubt unravel much of this Heilman genealogy. Nevertheless we give the record as we find it, leaving it to those who desire to disentangle the threads of this family history.

II. JOHN ADAM HEILMAN (John Jacob), bap. Feb. 24, 1715, at Zutzenhausen, Germany; d. Sept. 25, 1770, in Lebanon twp., then Lancaster, now Lebanon Co., Penna. He was one of the pioneers of the township. He was a man of stirring energy, and he not only made his arm felt in the clearing of the forest, but he took a prominent part in religious and social affairs, and was one of the founders of the old Hill Church, and an elder of the same as early as 1745. The first house, erected by John Adam Heilman, stands on the premises of his great-grandchild at Heilman's Dale, is yet in use, and well preserved. John Adam Heilman, or Hans Adam Heilman, as some of the old records have it, married MARIA CATHARINE STEGER, b. March 25, 1709; d. May 12, 1787; daughter of John Barnhard Steger, an early settler. Their remains rest in the cemetery of Hill Church. They had issue:

THE LIGHT FAMILY.

I. JOHN LIGHT, a native of the Palatinate, Germany, emigrated to America about the year 1719. He located on a tract of land in what was subsequently Lebanon township, Lancaster Co., Pa., now Lebanon County, and which he secured by patent, April 2, 1742. The same year he erected a massive two-story house, where for many years the Mennonites met for worship, holding their monthly meetings. During the French and Indian war it was the place of safety for the women and children of the surrounding country, and went by the name "Old Fort," having a stockade built around it. It is stated that as high as sixty families at one time took refuge therein, while the men went along the mountains, guarding the passes, or protected those who were gathering in the crops. We have no knowledge when John Light died, or the name of his wife. They had, among others, the following issue:

THE ORTHS, OF LEBANON.

I. On the right bank of the Danube, about fifteen miles east of Vienna, is the village of Orth, containing about three thousand inhabitants. In the year 1170, Hartneid von Orthe purchased the village and estate surrounding it, founded a church, and erected a castle. It remained in the family for several successive generations, when the proprietor, about the close of the seventeenth century, sold out and removed to Moravia, one of the northern provinces of Austria. The family cannot be traced from Moravia, to the Rhine. The first of the family, Balzer or Balthaser Orth, emigrated from the Palatinate to Lancaster (now Lebanon) County about the year 1725. There was warranted to him, on the 25th of November, 1735, three hundred acres of land in Lebanon township, "whereon he has been long settled." Of his children, we have the record of two, and, in the absence of the early Orphans' Court records, we cannot ascertain the year of his death.

- 2. i. Balzer, b. May 5, 1713; m. Rosina Kucher.
- 3. ii. Adam, b. 1718; m. Catharine Kucher.

II. BALTHASER ORTH (Balthaser), b. May 5, 1713, in the Palatinate, Germany; came with his parents to America about the year 1725, and took up a tract of land in 1742, and had administered to him the oath of allegiance April 11, 1755; d. Oct. 20, 1788, in Lebanon township; m. April 26, 1763, in Hebron Church, near Lebanon, by Rev. Zahm, ROSINA KUCHER,¹ b. March 19, 1741; d. April 3, 1814, in Lebanon township, and buried beside her husband in Hebron churchyard. They had issue:

- 4. i. Gottlieb, b. Feb. 23, 1764; m. Sarah Steiner.
 - ii. Andreas, b. Feb. 11, 1765; d. Oct. 16, 1788; buried at Hebron.

THE SNAVELY FAMILY.

We have the following records of possibly three different branches of Snavelys. As they all seem to have settled in the same locality, we are inclined to the belief that they belong to one family. The first record given is that obtained from the court records; the others coming through those interested.

I.

I. LEONARD SNAVELY, an emigrant from the Palatinate, Germany, emigrated to Pennsylvania, and on the 22d of August, 1747, took out a warrant for one hundred and fifty acres in Bethel township, then Lancaster County, on which he settled, and where he died in May, 1767. He left a wife and children as follows:

2. i. John.
- ii. Henry; m. Catharine —.
3. iii. Barbara; m. Christopher Koppenheffer.
- iv. Elizabeth.
- v. Catharine.

II. JOHN SNAVELY (Leonard), d. in Bethel twp., Dauphin, now Lebanon Co., Penna., leaving a wife and children as follows:

- i. Isaac.
- ii. John.
- iii. Catharine.
- iv. Elizabeth.
- v. Mary.
- vi. Ann.
- vii. Barbara.
- viii. Henry.

III. BARBARA SNAVELY (Leonard), m. CHRISTOPHER KOPPENHEFFER; d. September, 1785, in Heidelberg township, Dauphin (now Lebanon) Co., Penna. They had issue:

- i. Catharine.
- ii. Barbara; m. Michael Teiss, Jr.

II.

JACOB SNAVELY was born in Germany, and came to America in 1750, and was subsequently killed by Indians near Jonestown, now Lebanon County.

His son, Jacob Snavely, was born April 1, 1756; married Priscilla Fields, by whom he had two children, and afterwards removed to Virginia, where he died in 1788.

Maria Barbara, daughter of Jacob Snavely, Sr., was born Feb. 1, 1758, and subsequently married Martin Van Netta, and removed to Kentucky.

Jacob Snavely, 3d, was born near Jonestown, Feb. 21, 1778; married to Miss Salome Wild in 1803. She died in 1817. Five children were the fruit of this union.

John Snavely was born Oct. 22, 1780, and finally settled in Penn's Valley.

Joseph Snavely was born in Jonestown, Pa., Sept. 14, 1804, married to Ann Elizabeth Brost, and died Oct. 12, 1830.

Ann Maria Snavely was born in Jonestown, Aug. 27, 1809, married John Lesch, by whom she had five children, and died May 12, 1840.

Aaron Snavely was born in Jonestown Sept. 18, 1812, and died in June, 1853. His children were Elizabeth, who married John R. Groff, of Jonestown; Jacob K., who enlisted in Company E, Third Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and was killed at Readyville, near Nashville, Tenn., April 6, 1863; Henry, now residing in Cumberland County, Pa.; and Priscilla, now living with her mother in Jonestown.

Priscilla Snavely, sister of Aaron Snavely, was born March 27, 1815, married George Richards, and died April 5, 1853.

III.

The history of the Snavely family in Lebanon County goes back a long way. Just how long ago the incident occurred is not known, but it is stated that the progenitor of the Snavelys in Lebanon County came over from Germany when a lad in company with his father and mother. The boy was called John Ulrich, and in that day his family name was "Schnebeli." His parents died on shipboard, and young John, then but five years old, found himself upon the shores of the New World, a sorrowing orphan lad. He was, however, fortunate enough to find care and comfort at the hands of strangers, and, being bred to the trade of carpentering, drifted ultimately to near what is now Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., where he set up a small shop. He was young, sturdy, and ambitious. Naturally, therefore, he made a success of his undertaking, and in due time, being desirous of becoming a landholder, he purchased a large tract near Lebanon village, and upon the place now the home of Joseph Snavely he made a permanent location. There he pursued, with satisfaction and profit, the business of farming, and there he died. His sons were four in number, and were named Henry, John, Jacob, and Christian. Henry settled upon the homestead, John upon the present H. B. Snavely place, and Jacob upon the Samuel Light farm. Christian engaged in merchandising in Lebanon. Henry's only son, Joseph, was born in 1818. John's sons were David, William, Joseph, and Samuel. Jacob's sons were Jefferson and William. Christian had five sons,—Andrew, Cyrus, George, John, and Elijah. H. C. Snavely, son to Joseph Snavely and great-grandson to John Ulrich Schnebeli, was born upon the present Joseph Snavely's place in 1844. There he resided until 1878, when he moved to his present home. Joseph Snavely's other sons are John S. and George. Joseph Snavely has been a farmer from his youth, and for many years was a local preacher in the United Brethren Church.

THE FAMILY OF MARTIN THOMAS.

I. MARTIN THOMAS, son of Durst Thomas, a native of the Palatinate, Germany, born about 1701, emigrated with his family to America in the year 1749, landing at Philadelphia on the 30th of August that year, his father having preceded him several years. The ship "Crown," Michael James, master, in which they embarked, was heavily laden, having less than five hundred souls on board on its arrival out of over six hundred at leaving Rotterdam. The mortality on that crowded vessel was fearful, and it is hardly probable that the family of Martin Thomas entirely escaped. He located in what is now Lebanon township, Lebanon County, Pa., where he died in 1758, leaving a wife, BARBARA, and issue as follows:

- i. Philip, b. 1725; nothing further is known of this branch, save that he went South.

i. Anna Maria, m. William Wolf, of Centre Hall.

ii. Margaret Louisa, m. J. Chuett, of Williamsport.

THE ZEHRING FAMILY.

The history of the Zehring family, it is claimed, dates back to the fifth century. It is stated that one of the early German emperors who had been engaged in a war with the Romans was defeated, and the sovereign took refuge in the Kaiserstuhl Mountain, in Breisgau, and was there secreted by a charcoal-burner. For assistance and the discovery of a silver-mine in the Black Forest, when the fortunes of war changed, the emperor created the charcoal-burner duke of the Province of Baden, and named him Zaehringen. Tradition further states that the Zaehringers or Zehringers of America are descendants of the house of Zaehringen of Baden. The name in America is variously written Zaehring, Zehring, Zearing, Zeyring, etc. As in the case of other families, this is due to carelessness in orthography.

I. LUDWIG ZEHRING, the first emigrant, a native of Baden, came to America about 1725, and shortly after his arrival located on a tract of land two miles east of Jonestown, now Lebanon County. This tract of land originally contained — acres, and has been in continuous possession of the descendants of Ludwig Zehring. The ancestor was a man of strong force of character, well educated, and of considerable influence on the frontiers. For many years he acted as a kind of agent for his countrymen, and transacted business for them, not only in this but in the Fatherland. "He was faithful to every trust committed to his care," is the estimate of him which has come down to us. About the year 1773, accompanied by his son Matthias, he made a voyage to Europe, but taking ill, died at sea and there buried. He was thrice married. There was issue:

2. i. Henry, b. April 5, 1737; m. and had issue.

ii. Ludwig, b. December, 1738; took an active part in the war for independence, and was one of the representatives from Col. Curtis Grubb's battalion at the Lancaster Convention of July 4, 1776. At the close of the Revolution he settled at or near Pittsburgh. Nothing further is known of him.

iii. Matthias, b. 1741; d. May 13, 1817, near Woodstock, Shenandoah Co., Va., where he settled after the Revolution; m. Rebecca Yeager, and left a large family.

3. iv. Christian, b. Oct. 5, 1755; m. 1st. — Umberger; 2d, Anna Maria Rauch.

II. HENRY ZEHRING (Ludwig), b. April 5, 1737, in Bethel township, Lancaster County, now Swatara township, Lebanon Co., Penna.; d. April 19, 1819, at Jonestown; m. and had issue:

4. i. Henry, b. March 20, 1760; m. Maria Elizabeth Rupp.

ii. Ludwig, m. Miss Boeshore; purchased a large tract of land northwest of Jonestown, following farming, and died there. Had six sons,—Ludwig, John, Peter, George, Adam, and Christian. Ludwig and John died unmarried on the old homestead; the others went to the West.

iii. John Jacob secured the old homestead of his father and grandfather, where he lived and died. His son John became the owner, and after his death his son William became the possessor, and now resides thereon.

iv. John, usually called Hannes, resided at Quitapahilla; m. and left a large family, whose descendants are scattered over the West.

v. Barbara, m. Jacob Decker; after her death Mr. Decker married her sister Catharine.

vi. Catharine, m. Jacob Decker; their descendants are in the Western country.

vii. Margaretta, m. Jacob Rauch; they lived and died in Hanover township, Dauphin County, Penna.

III. CHRISTIAN ZEHRING (Ludwig), b. Oct. 5, 1755, in Bethel township, Lancaster County, now Swatara township, Lebanon County, Penna.; d. June 5, 1832, in Warren County, Ohio, and is buried at Springboro', that county (see biographical sketch); m. 1st, Miss UMBERGER, and had issue, all b. in East Hanover (now Union) township, Lebanon Co., Penna.:

i. Henry, m. and removed to Montgomery Co., O.

ii. Elizabeth, d. 1831, in Union township, Lebanon Co., Pa.; m. John Walmer.

iii. Catharine, m. Peter Fisher; removed to Perry Co., Penn., thence to the State of Indiana.

Christian Zehring, m. 2d, ANNA MARIA RAUCH, b. April 11, 1762, in Hanover township, Lancaster Co., Penna.; d. June 22, 1839, at Germantown, Montgomery Co., O. They had issue:

iv. Christian, m. and removed to Warren County, O., and d. at Franklin, O.

viii. Jacob, d. in Montgomery Co., O.

ix. David, d. June 6, 1863, in Montgomery Co., O.

x. Bernhard, d. Sept. 18, 1877, in Montgomery Co., O.

xi. Peter, d. May 14, 1863; settled in Franklin Co., Ind.

xii. Anna Maria, d. May 9, 1880; m. Lewis Mease; they removed to Montgomery Co., O.

xiii. Susan, m. Rev. John Crider; they reside in Montgomery Co., O.

xiv. Martha, d. in Warren Co., O.; m. Mr. Fry.

IV. HENRY ZEHRING (Henry, Ludwig), b. March 20, 1760, in Bethel township, Lancaster Co., now Swatara township, Lebanon Co., Pa.; d. Jan. 24, 1798, in East Hanover township, Dauphin Co., now Union township, Lebanon Co., Pa.; m. 1781, MARIA ELIZABETH RUPP, b. Oct. 15, 1762, in Lebanon township, then Lancaster County, Pa.; d. May 11, 1836, at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa. They had issue:

i. Henry, -b. Sept. 26, 1783; d. Feb. 21, 1830, at Shiremanstown, Cumberland Co., Pa.; m. Margaret Ely, b. March 1, 1781; d. July 28, 1865; and had Henry, m. Eliz. Eichelberger; John H., m. Sarah Krall; Elizabeth, m. John Maunessmith; Jacob, m. Eliza Swiler.

ii. Jonas, b. May 4, 1785; d. Dec. 20, 1831; m. Anna Barbara Evers, b. 1785; d. Sept. 26, 1860; and had issue.

iii. Lewis, b. Jan. 15, 1787; d. May 8, 1845; m. Elizabeth Bobb, b. Jan. 10, 1792; d. March 24, 1849; and had issue.

iv. Elizabeth, b. Dec. 13, 1789; d. June 4, 1859; m. Joseph Mitchell, b. Oct. 22, 1783; d. Feb. 12, 1832 (see Mitchell record).

6. v. Jacob, b. Nov. 6, 1790; m. Susan Peterman.

vi. John, b. Sept. 20, 1792; d. Oct. 5, 1846; m. Margaret Herman, b. Aug. 28, 1793; d. Oct. 17, 1859 (see biographical sketch).

vii. Martin, b. July 4, 1794; d. July 24, 1855, at Berlin, Bureau Co., Ill.; m. Sarah Shafer, b. May 9, 1797; d. Feb. 11, 1869; and had issue.

viii. David, b. May 7, 1796; d. s. p.

ix. Anna Maria, b. March 17, 1798; d. s. p.

After the death of Mr. Zehring his widow m. secondly Michael Strob, b. Dec. 7, 1743; d. Jan. 21, 1803; and left issue; m. third, Rev. Christian Ludwig, b. Jan. 16, 1762; d. Nov. 15, 1827; and had issue.

V. JOHN ZEHRING (Christian, Ludwig), b. Jan. 10, 1790, in Union township, Lebanon Co., Pa.; d. May 23, 1867; m. EVE BARBARA DECKER, b. Jan. 1, 1795, in East Hanover township, Lebanon Co., Pa.; d. Aug. 10, 1868, in Union township; daughter of Jacob Decker, a soldier of the Revolution, who died Feb. 24, 1843, in East Hanover township, Lebanon Co., Pa.; all buried in Walmer's Church cemetery. They had issue:

i. John Decker, b. Jan. 16, 1815; resides at Jonestown.

ii. Jacob Decker, b. July 25, 1817; now a minister of the Reformed Church, residing at Codorus, York Co., Pa.

Jacob Zehring m. secondly, MRS. MARY FRANK, a widow, whose first husband was Benjamin Mayer, printer, of Harrisburg, her maiden name Mary Bressler, b. June 17, 1785; d. April 16, 1861; daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth Bressler. No issue.

BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY.

[If our readers do not find among the names which follow sketches of men who were more or less prominent in their day and generation, it is because our efforts to obtain such have been fruitless. There are many whose memory we would have been well pleased to perpetuate, for their mission when on earth was such as fully entitles them to a place within these pages.]

REV. JACOB ALBRIGHT.

John Albright (Albrecht in German) emigrated from Germany to this country and settled in Douglas township, Montgomery Co., Pa. His domicile was at or near a mountain ridge known as Fuchsburg (Fox Mountain), about ten miles southeast of Pottstown. In this obscure spot his son, Rev. Jacob Albright, was born May 1, 1759. The house which sheltered his infant head, and where he spent his childhood and youth, is still standing. It is a one-story stone building of solid but plain architecture. His parents were poor, and compelled to struggle hard to provide for themselves and their children the necessaries of life. The neighborhood in its social, moral, and religious aspects was then and is now of such a nature that one is forcibly reminded of the place where the founder of our religion was brought up, and of which it was said, "Can there any good come out of it?" However, the poverty and privations of his youth served as a rugged school to prepare him for the severe and almost superhuman labors of his later years. Like most men of his early surroundings, hardly anything is known of his boyhood. His parents belonged to the Evangelical Lutheran Church, whose minister baptized him in his infancy and gave him the usual catechetical instruction when he arrived at the proper age. He also received such instructions as the parochial schools of his time afforded. Our beneficent common school system had then no existence. In rude log cabins, unworthy of the name of school-houses, the simplest rudiments of education were imperfectly taught. Rev. Henry Harbaugh, in the Pennsylvania German vernacular, has well said of these schools,—

"Inwennig, um der Ofte rum, Hoche die Kleine Tschüps,
Sie lerne artlich hart verschteb,
Un wer net wees sel' A B C—Sel' Obre Kriege Rääps.

"Die arme Drep! dort hocke se
In Miserie—juscht denk!
Es is Kee' Wunner—nemm mei Wort—
Dass se so wenig lerne dort, Uf selle hoche Benk."

In one of these unpromising institutions young Albright acquired the art of reading and writing the German language, and also the first principles of arithmetic. He never enjoyed the advantages of an English education. Of the German he acquired a correct knowledge by reading Luther's translation of the Bible, as also other books written in pure German. In person he was of medium stature, about five feet eight inches in height. He had an aquiline nose, and his mouth and chin were exquisitely formed. His eyes were blue and very bright, his hair was black, and his complexion fair. Though in his temperament the sanguine and choleric dispositions predominated, yet his bearing was always graceful and dignified. About his person and dress he was scrupulously neat and clean. Some persons who knew him but imperfectly thought he was proud. Those, however, who knew him intimately and understood his character better believed him to be entirely innocent of this charge. In 1785 he was married to Miss Catherine Cope, and shortly afterwards moved to Lancaster County, and purchased a tract of land, eligibly located, near Frysville, in the present East Cocalico, but then Earl township. Here, besides farming, he also carried on the brick and tile business. At that time many of the dwellings were covered with tiles, and some of these antique relics are still in existence. In 1790 several of his children died of dysentery. At the funeral of one of them, Rev. Anthony Hantz, a minister of the German Reformed Church, preached a sermon which touched Albright's heart. Of the state of his mind at this time he says, "In my early youth I had received catechetical instruction in the doctrines of the Christian religion. I did not then comprehend the great truths I learned, and could not appreciate them; but a feeling of reverence towards God was implanted which never left me. This feeling was very undefined, but it induced me to regard every place where God was worshipped as sacred, and I could not despise or persecute those persons who engaged in the worship of the Most High, no matter to what sect they belonged. This reverence for the worship of God induced me to frequently attend religious meetings, and to listen attentively to the exhortations of the ministers of the gospel. I became frightened at myself, the judgments of God stood before my imagination, my spirit experienced a deep dejection, and at last, on a certain day in July, in my thirty-second year, it rose to such a degree that it bordered on despair. I fell upon my knees, and a long-continued, earnest, and ardent prayer for pardon and salvation went up to the throne of the Most High."

At this time he had no thoughts of regularly preaching the gospel, and he passed through great struggles before he could make up his mind to take that step. He clearly foresaw the labors, difficulties, and afflictions he would have to endure; and then his keen sensitiveness as to his own efficiency weighed heavily on his soul. He hesitated until the conviction of his divine call to the ministry became irresistible, and he felt, with St. Paul, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." He especially felt a deep solicitude for his German countrymen, whose spiritual welfare lay near his sympathetic heart. He soon became known in the neighborhood as a very zealous worker. As regards his relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church at this juncture, it is difficult to arrive at a correct conclusion. It is doubtless true that some Methodist ministers occasionally preached in German, but there were none that exclusively labored in that language. The impression seems to have extensively prevailed that the German language would soon die out on this continent, and that therefore it was impolitic to employ German preachers. Albright, however, felt such a powerful internal call to labor among his German brethren that he could not remain silent or inactive, but continued zealously to labor in his Divine Master's cause. At first his success was but moderate. From 1796, when he first set out on his mission, until 1803, when the first Conference was held, the number of his followers did not exceed forty, and besides him there were only two preachers, Revs. Walter and Lieser. This slow increase was principally owing to the illiterate and obscure character of the ministers engaged in the work and the powerful opposition and persecution which was aroused against them. Besides this, Albright and his coadjutors had up to this time confined themselves almost exclusively to the counties of Bucks, Berks, and Northampton, emphatically Albright's home; and a greater than he had said before him, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country and in his own house." Afterwards, when the theatre of their operations was transferred to distant fields, whose soil was perhaps more promising, their labors yielded more abundantly.

On Sept. 15-16, 1807, at Mühlbach (Millcreek), they held their first regular Annual Conference. At this meeting five itinerant and three local preachers and twenty official lay members participated. Here Albright was elected superintendent of the society, and by a resolution of the Conference he was directed to prepare rules of discipline for the government of the religious society thus organized. This, on account of declining health and early death, he was prevented from accomplishing. The discipline was afterwards prepared by Rev. G. Miller in 1809. The membership at this time numbered two hundred and twenty. It was soon apparent that Albright's health was daily failing, but he still continued to travel and to labor as much as his impaired strength permitted him to do. During the winter he traveled with the late Rev. J. Driesbach, who was then a young man, but who has recently died at the advanced age of eighty-two years. Their circuit extended partly over the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, Lancaster, Berks, Bucks, Montgomery, Northampton, Lehigh, and Schuylkill. They had about thirty appointments or places to preach, of which some were twenty or thirty miles apart. It was during this season that the society at Millersville, Lancaster Co., received great accessions in numbers, among whom was John Erb, who afterwards became an itinerant minister. On Easter-day, 1808, a quarterly meeting was held at Albany, Berks Co., where Albright for the last time appointed his preachers to their several fields of labor. He now began to sink rapidly. Incessant travel, exposure to the inclemency of every season, the privations incident to the itinerancy, and the almost superhuman labors performed by him had at last undermined his constitution and broken down his health to such a degree that he was compelled to return home. He was suffering with a pulmonary affection, which, however, had now progressed so far that he never reached his earthly home again. He remained with Christian friends at Mühlbach, who kindly nursed him during a short illness, being confined to his bed only for a few days. He died May 18, 1808, in the fiftieth year of his age. His remains were buried on the 20th, in a neighboring burying-ground, where, in commemoration of his death and burial, a church has since been erected, which bears the name of "Albright's Church."

Since his death the religious denomination founded by him has enjoyed great prosperity. The number of regular or itinerant ministers exceeds five hundred, and the lay membership is over one hundred thousand. The society supports several institutions of learning, their book concern is in a flourishing condition, and one of their papers, Der Christliche Botschafter, is the oldest German religious journal in this country. They support promising missions in Germany and Switzerland, which appear to be destined to exert a great influence in the future. This society founded by Albright is now known as the "Evangelical Association."

JACOB L. BICKSLER.

Jacob L. Bicksler, son of Daniel Bicksler (1774-1832) and Mary Light (1785-1857), was born Jan. 31, 1814, at "Lone Pine Place," the family homestead, near Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., Pa. His great-grandfather, Peter Bicksler, in company with a brother, Christian Bicksler, emigrated from Switzerland to Pennsylvania prior to 1765. The latter relocated in Cocalico township, Lancaster County, the former in Bethel township, Berks County. A son of Peter Bicksler, Joseph Bicksler, removed about 1774 to the farm occupied by his descendants in the fourth generation in now Lebanon County. Here his son, Daniel Bicksler, was born, the father of the subject of this sketch. Jacob L. Bicksler passed his boyhood on his father's farm, his education prior to reaching his majority consisting of a few months' attendance at a pay school in the neighborhood. He continued farming until his twenty-fifth year, when he resolved upon securing an English education, and for that purpose attended school at Easton, and the academy at Myerstown, which, with self-application, enabled him to secure such a knowledge of the English tongue as to be of essential service in his after-life. He subsequently taught school during the winter months. He served in various public offices, civil and military, and was commissioned by Governor Pollock colonel of militia. In 1860 he was elected a representative in the State Legislature, and served his constituents with faithfulness. The following year he was re-nominated, but with the entire Republican ticket was defeated. He then retired from political life, and devoted himself entirely to his farm. He died at the old homestead the 18th of February, 1879, aged sixty-five years. Col. Bicksler married, in 1842, Lucetta Hoffa, daughter of John and Elizabeth Hoffa, born May 31, 1819, at Fredericksburg; died May 15, 1866. Their children were George W., d. s. p.; Mary J., married George S. Swope; John H. L.; D. Webster; Elizabeth Jane, d. s. p.; Jane Elizabeth, d. s. p.; and Jacob H.

JOHN BICKEL.

John Bickel, an emigrant from Switzerland, was an early settler in Bethel township, his parents coming to Pennsylvania prior to the French and Indian war. John was born in 1748, and was brought up amidst the excitements of pioneer life. He was a soldier of the Revolution, in Capt. Koppenheffer's company of Col. Timothy Green's battalion, subsequently in service on the frontiers. As one of the heroes of the war for independence, he enjoyed the repose of the true soldier in the long years of peace. He died in 1840, at Jonestown, at the age of ninety-two years, honored and respected. Of his children, John married and raised a large family, was the first postmaster at Jonestown, and died at an advanced age. His daughter Catherine married Jacob Mish, of Harrisburg; they were the parents of Dr. John B. Mish, of Lebanon.

REV. JOHN CONRAD BUCHER.

In the seventh generation of a family record which embraces nearly three hundred and fifty years is found the birth-date of John Conrad Bucher, June 10, 1730. He was the son of John Jacob Bucher, Landvogt of the District of Neukirch, in the Canton of Schaffhausen, Switzerland. Intending him for the ministry, his father afforded him the best educational advantages of his time and country. His album, still preserved, testifies to his connection with the celebrated institutions of learning at St. Gall, Basle, and Göttingen, and contains among its interesting and valuable contributions the autographs of Wagelin, Zollikoffer, John Laurence Mosheim, and others.

At the age of twenty-five years he came to America. It would be interesting to learn what circumstances led him to the Province of Pennsylvania. Having received a theological education, with the ministry in view as his life-work, it is a matter of plausible speculation that through the instrumentality of the Rev. Michael Schlatter, who had a short time previously visited Europe for the purpose of bringing out German Reformed pastors to minister to the spiritual wants of the large German population of the Province, Conrad Bucher was induced to leave the refinements of a home abounding in wealth and comforts and undergo the hardships necessarily attendant upon life in a new country, although there is no positive evidence that he had fully entered the ministry until many years later.

The French and Indian war commenced in 1754; beginning with Braddock's defeat, in 1755, the English arms met nothing but disaster. The county of Cumberland, which embraced all the country west of the Susquehanna, was especially exposed to Indian raids and incursions. In 1758, General Forbes, a Scotch veteran, was appointed commander-in-chief of the expedition for the reduction of the French Fort Du Quesne. The General Assembly of the Province resolved to place at his disposal two thousand seven hundred men. In order that German and Swiss settlers would more readily enter the service, Parliament, in 1756, passed an "act providing for the appointment of German, Swiss, and Dutch Protestants as officers." In this emergency Conrad Bucher entered the provincial service, commissioned as ensign, or second lieutenant, April 1, 1758, in the First Battalion, Pennsylvania Regiment.

The provincial army having achieved success in taking Fort Du Quesne and dispersing the French, established, manned, and equipped Fort Pitt, and returned to Carlisle. In this famous expedition Col. George Washington was in command of the Virginians, Col. Bouquet of the English, and John Armstrong, James Potter, Hugh Mercer, William Lyon, William Maclay, names famous subsequently in Revolutionary annals, held subordinate positions.

Conrad Bucher, continuing in service, was commissioned, April 19, 1760, first lieutenant (Pennsylvania Archives, p. 603) and stationed at Fort Louther, Carlisle, one of the line of forts erected for the protection of the frontier.

Lieut. Bucher participated in Bouquet's expedition, in 1763, for the relief of Fort Pitt, which had been assailed by the combined Indian nations in the war known as Pontiac's Conspiracy, and which was the next active field service of the provincial army. It was on this march westward that the famous battle of Bushy Run was fought, on the 5th and 6th of August, in which the Indians undertook to wipe out the little army as they had done with Braddock in 1755, but in which they, in turn, were so thoroughly demoralized and their prestige destroyed, through the superior tactics of Bouquet, that they retreated without making further demonstrations against the fort.

By commissions dated July 12, 1764, Lieut. Bucher was promoted to the adjutancy, and, July 31st, to a captaincy "in the Second Battalion of the Pennsylvania Regiment of foot," Asher Clayton, lieutenant-colonel commandant, and the Hon. John Penn, colonel. These four commissions on parchment, and in good preservation, are among the family records at Harrisburg.

Capt. Bucher's final service was in Bouquet's expedition against the Ohio Indians, who, forgetting their punishment at Bushy Run, had again become bold and incursive. This expedition, like the two former, concentrated forces at Carlisle, and commenced their march westward, over the route twice trodden, on the 9th of August, 1764. It is matter of history that Bouquet was eminently successful,—the Indians were brought to terms and sued for peace, and their captives, men, women, and children, delivered up. The army returned to Carlisle early in 1765, and the provincial troops were disbanded. Thus terminated the military career of John Conrad Bucher, having participated in three memorable campaigns which had a most important bearing in the early history of the State and nation.

While Bouquet's army halted at Fort Bedford, on the 8th of September, 1764, the officers of the Pennsylvania regiments formed an association under a written agreement "to apply to the Proprietaries for a tract of land sufficiently extensive to accommodate each one with a reasonable and commodious plantation, etc." In their formal application they represented that the land thus far purchased from the Indians did not afford any situation convenient for their purpose; they therefore prayed the Proprietaries to make a "new purchase, etc." In 1768 the Fifth Purchase, embracing the territory from the northeastern to the southwestern section of the Province not already purchased, was made, and in 1769 twenty-four thousand acres were granted them; of this amount, six hundred and sixteen acres in Buffalo Valley (Union County) and five hundred and seventy acres on Bald Eagle Creek (Centre County) were allotted to Capt. Bucher.

Feb. 26, 1760, Lieut. Bucher married Mary Magdalena, daughter of George Hoak, one of the earliest citizens of York, then in Penn's Manor of Springettsbury, and the purchaser of lot No. 107; the lady, born Feb. 2, 1742, survived her husband nearly forty years, and was buried at Alexandria, Huntingdon Co., Pa. Her maternal blood was Huguenot, of the family Lefevre. The issue of this marriage was three sons and five daughters, the latter of whom all died young; of the sons, John Jacob, of Dauphin, and John Conrad, of Huntingdon, became conspicuous men in their respective counties.

Of the exact time of Conrad Bucher's full ordination into the ministry of the German Reformed Church we have no record; his numerous manuscripts in German text, which have never been critically examined by competent hands, might elicit much of public as well as of private interest. It is, however, certain that he did not regularly enter into the service of the church until he had ceased to wear the livery of the king in 1765, although he may have occasionally officiated, as it was not uncommon in those perilous times that one man should represent the dual professions of priest and soldier.

From 1765 to 1768, during which time he maintained his residence at Carlisle, we learn from his memoranda that he ministered regularly to the congregations at Falling Spring, Hagerstown, Sharpsborough, Frederickstown, Middletown, Hummelstown, Quitapahilla, and Lebanon, as well as at Carlisle, and that he preached and catechized at other places.

In the year 1767 (Pennsylvania Archives, Second Series, vol. ii.), the "Rev. Conrad Bucher's" name is found in the list of ministers and magistrates to whom marriage licenses, then requisite under proprietary regulations, were issued by the Provincial Secretary.

Having accepted a call to the church in Lebanon in 1768, he removed thither in the spring of 1769. But his service was not confined to this church; his field of labor now included several of his old congregations and those at Maytown, Manheim, Rapho, etc. This circuit he seems to have traveled regularly, preaching often, unwearied in his work, filled with zeal, and devoted to his Master's cause.

Up to 1770 he had occasionally included the congregation at Reading in his visitations, and so pleased them as to elicit a call to become their pastor. But on account of ill health he forbore its consideration, and at last Cötus (the Synod) resolved that "the decision should be laid upon the conscience of the Rev. Mr. Bucher himself;" he declined this call "from love to his own congregations."

When the conflict for American independence arose it found Conrad Bucher on the side of liberty and his adopted land. He had, no doubt, many pleasant memories of grateful service to that government which had been instrumental in opening the way to a new life in this country; but he had also many loved objects to cherish and protect, and a higher ambition to serve the liberties of a free people. He consequently joined his fellow-citizens in their formal oath of allegiance, taken at Lancaster, June 10, 1778. Although positive evidence of the fact is wanting, yet it is believed, as it is traditionary in the family, that he served as chaplain to a Pennsylvania regiment in the Revolutionary war.

As we approach the fiftieth year of Conrad Bucher's life, it is found that the activities of his earlier manhood have left fatal evidences of overwork or undue exposure, too continued strain of laborious effort for the good of others and too little consideration of self. Some form of heart-disease developed itself.

In the Cötal Minutes of April, 1779, mention is made incidentally of his "sickly condition," and following this he was compelled, on account of continued failing health, to relinquish his more distant congregations. To his last capable moment, however, he "waited on the Lord," and was assiduous in his pastoral duties.

On the 15th of August, 1780, he was invited to solemnize a marriage at Killinger's, on the Quitopahilla, near Millerstown (Annville). While there, amid the nuptial festivities, he was suddenly stricken down. In the graveyard of the ancient German Reformed Church at Lebanon, in whose pulpit he had ministered twelve years, reposes the dust of John Conrad Bucher, with four children, who died in infancy.

The Rev. Conrad Bucher was equally fluent in English, German, and French. His Bibles in the two foreign languages are still preserved, the German having his preaching texts all marked. Endowed with the genius of his Fatherland, he was also a fine musician and singer. His voice was of unusual power and compass, a bass that could fill the church. He was systematic in his general habits, and possessed a degree of skill with the pen that was evidenced in his excellent copying of music and keeping his books. He was unquestionably a man of great cultivation, industry, perseverance, and zeal in his Father's business. His name and services have been properly associated by Rev. Dr. Harbaugh with the honored "Fathers of the German Reformed Church in America," and though his life-work does not dazzle, it nevertheless endures, and he has his reward.

GEORGE DAWSON COLEMAN.

George Dawson Coleman was born in the city of Philadelphia, Jan. 13, 1825, and died at Lebanon, Pa., Sept. 9, 1878. His ancestors were early identified with the iron interests of the State of Pennsylvania, his great-grandfather, James Old, having large iron-works near Reading and Norristown. His grandfather, Robert Coleman, was for some years associated in business with Mr. Old. He afterwards married his daughter, and purchased the Elizabeth Furnace in Lancaster County, where he manufactured ammunition for the government during the Revolutionary war. The iron chain which was stretched across the Delaware River below Philadelphia to prevent the approach of the British war-ships was also manufactured by him. He was the first of the Coleman family to obtain an interest in the Cornwall ore-bank, purchasing the same of the Grubb family. His sons were William, Edward, James, and Burd Coleman. James, the father of Robert and George Dawson Coleman, passed his life in the iron business in Lancaster and Lebanon Counties. His wife was a Miss Dawson, of Philadelphia.

George Dawson Coleman received his preparatory education at Princeton, N. J., and subsequently entered the collegiate department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he was graduated in 1843. In 1846, in connection with his brother Robert, he erected the North Lebanon Furnaces, Lebanon, Pa., the first anthracite furnaces built in that county, and there engaged in the manufacture of iron. The two brothers together owned a fifteen-fortieths interest in the Cornwall ore deposit. In 1852, Robert withdrew from the firm, spending the remainder of his life in Paris. From that time until his death the North Lebanon Furnaces were operated by George Dawson Coleman, and are now owned and operated by his widow and heirs. During his life Mr. Coleman was a successful and enterprising iron manufacturer, and was extensively known in that business throughout the State. He was also a large stockholder in the Pennsylvania Steel Company at Steelton, Dauphin Co. He was a warm supporter of the government during the late war, contributing freely of his means to the organization and equipment of the different regiments formed in his section of the State. Particular mention may be made of the Ninety-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, which regiment he raised, to which he contributed over ten thousand dollars, and whose subsequent military career he watched with peculiar interest and solicitude. To the assistance of the widows and orphans of those who fought our battles he devoted large sums, and won by his devotion to general charity the warm gratitude of many hearts. He was also an active member of the Sanitary Commission, and frequently in person distributed its stores upon the battle-field. Possessed of a liberal and generous spirit, he felt a deep interest in all movements tending to develop and improve the community in which he resided. He was a member of the State Board of Charities from the time of its organization in 1869, and president of that body at the time of his death. He also filled the position of president of the First National Bank of Lebanon for a number of years. Although having a natural distaste for politics, he felt it his duty to respond promptly to the call of the people to represent them in the State Legislature during the war times, and subsequently served three years in the Senate. His course as a legislator was marked by the faithful and conscientious discharge of all his duties, and he was recognized as a valuable coadjutor in the important work of legislation. He took a deep interest in the religious welfare of those in his employ, building and supporting churches for them at Elizabeth and Lebanon Furnaces. Nor were his contributions to religious objects confined to these localities. Several years before his death he presented his grandfather's house, at the corner of Front and Pine Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., to St. Peter's Church, contributing in addition a large sum for the purpose of altering and arranging the house for their mission work. His whole life was an example of generosity and kindness of heart rarely equaled, and in the community in which he lived and labored no man was more universally respected and beloved. Mr. Coleman, in 1852, married Miss Brown, of Philadelphia, who, with two sons and five daughters, survived him.

ROBERT COLEMAN.

Robert Coleman was born near Castlefin, in the County of Donegal, in the kingdom of Ireland, on the 4th of November, A.D. 1748.

Robert Coleman left Ireland A.D. 1764, at the age of sixteen years. He arrived at Philadelphia with letters to Mr. Blair McClanaghan and the Messrs. Biddle, who recommended him to Mr. Read, prothonotary of Reading, in whose employ he remained two years, at the expiration of which he entered the employ of Peter Grubb as clerk at Hopewell Forge. He remained there six (6) months, leaving for a situation at Quitopahilla Forge, near Lebanon, Pa., the property of James Old. Mr. Old some time after moving from Speedwell Forge to Reading Furnace, took Robert Coleman with him. While at the furnace he married (Oct. 4, 1773) Mr. Old's eldest daughter, Anne Old (who was born May 21, 1756). Robert Coleman then rented Salford Forge, near Norristown, and remained there for three years.

In 1776 he moved to Elizabeth Furnace, which he first rented, and afterwards he bought out gradually the different shares from the firm who owned it, viz., Stiegel, Stedman & Benezet.

He retired from business and removed to Lancaster in the year 1809.

GEN. JOHN PHILIP DE HAAS.

John Philip De Haas, son of John Nicholas De Haas, was born about 1735 in Holland. His father emigrated to Pennsylvania a year or two thereafter, for on the 28th of March, 1739, he took out a warrant for one hundred and fifty acres of land in Lebanon township, then Lancaster, now Lebanon County, Pa. He was brought up on his father's pioneer farm, but must have received the rudiments of a fair German and English education, for we find him early in life as an officer during the French and Indian war. He was commissioned ensign of the Provincial Battalion of Pennsylvania, Governor William Denny commanding, December, 1757; adjutant of the First Battalion, Col. John Armstrong, April 30, 1758; captain of the Pennsylvania regiment, Col. James Burd, April 28, 1760; and major of the Pennsylvania regiment commanded by Governor John Penn, First Battalion, Col. Turbutt Francis, June 9, 1764, and served under Gen. Bouquet in the expedition of 1763, and shared with the other provincial officers in the land-grants on the West Branch. His son, John Philip, moved upon this land early in the present century, and his descendants are very numerous, both in Clinton and Centre Counties. In June, 1764, Maj. De Haas was in command of Fort Henry, an important post, guarding a pass through the Kittochtinny Hills. From 1765 to 1775 he resided at Lebanon "as one of His Majesty's justices of the peace for ye county of Lancaster," and was also interested in the iron business in that neighborhood. When the Revolution opened he became very ardent in the cause, and was on the Committee of Observation for Lebanon township. When the First Pennsylvania Battalion was raised in the fall of 1775, John Bull was elected colonel by the Congress. He resigned, however, owing to some trouble with the officers of the battalion, on the 20th of January, 1776, and Congress, on the 22d of February, elected John Philip De Haas, of Lebanon, colonel of the same, to rank from January 22d.

By a letter, under date of Jan. 6, 1776, we find that he was busily recruiting at that time, the men being merged into the First Battalion, but the rolls of the command are so meagre that no positive information can be gathered as to the companies raised at Lebanon. At the date referred to the gunsmiths of Lebanon were at work upon his muskets, but were delayed by the non-arrival of the gun-bargels from Lancaster. His command was in the Northern campaign of 1776, and partook of the privations and sufferings of that futile attempt to call to the aid of the colonies the inhabitants of Canada. Their loyalty to British interests was unquestioned. Col. De Haas' testimony as to his officers will apply to himself,—“This is to certify that during the time I had the honor to command the above gentlemen they behaved themselves like gentlemen and as became good soldiers.” His battalion became the nucleus for the formation of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment of the Continental line, of which Col. De Haas was commissioned colonel Oct. 25, 1776. On the 21st of February, 1777, he was promoted by Congress brigadier-general. He seems to have been in continuous service until the close of 1778, when he appears to have been out of the army. It was then that his enemies, those whom he had possibly been severe to when in military command, sought through the law to annoy and worry him. He was out of office, and to rid himself of these tormentors removed to Philadelphia in 1779. We have no knowledge of his business, there. He died in that city on the 3d of June, 1786, leaving his wife, Eleanor, and son, John Philip, as the executors of his estate. The latter was an ensign in his father's regiment during the Revolution, and the similarity of names has caused some confusion with biographers. Whatever may be said of Gen. De Haas' sternness, it was due to his being an excellent disciplinarian. He was a faithful, brave, and gallant officer, and one whom fame cannot let die.

COL. D. C. DISSINGER.

David C. Dissinger was born in Shaefferstown, March 5, 1840, and was the youngest of a family of thirteen children. At the age of eleven he was apprenticed to a tailor, at which trade he remained five years. At sixteen years of age he removed to Lebanon, and worked for four years at the stone-cutting trade. At the commencement of the war he enlisted for three months in Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. At the expiration of his term he returned to Lebanon, and joined the Ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was elected first lieutenant of a company. At their first engagement, at Williamsburg, the captain was absent, and the command of the company fell upon Lieut. Dissinger. At Fair Oaks, Company F of the Ninety-third, in connection with several other companies, acted as advance picket-guard. These companies were surrounded on the first day of the fight and were in danger of being captured, but were saved by the heroic conduct of Lieut. Dissinger, who in the wild panic that ensued after the discovery of their dangerous position inside the rebel lines drew his revolver and forced the men back into ranks. Placing himself at the head of the companies, he conducted the retreat. When night had with her mantle draped the scene, he arrived at the rifle-pits within the Union lines at the head of one thousand men. For his gallantry he was highly complimented by Gen. Peck. After the Seven Days' fighting at Harrison Landing he was taken sick, and sent to the hospital at Washington. As he did not recover rapidly, he resigned his commission and returned to Lebanon. After a year spent here in the book and stationery business, he went West and engaged in working at his trade as a stone-cutter in a number of places. On Sept. 24, 1865, he went to Sunbury, Northumberland Co., and opened the first marble-yard that was ever in that place. After working at his trade for three years he embarked in the mercantile business with P. H. Moore. Mr. Clement afterwards succeeded Mr. Moore, and the firm of Clement & Dissinger continued the business until a recent period. In 1871, Messrs. Dissinger and Moore erected the Clement House and the fine business block on Third and Market Streets in Sunbury. In 1874 he erected his handsome residence on Chestnut Street, and also a number of tenant-houses in different parts of the town. He was married April 10, 1866, to Fanny, daughter of Ira T. Clement, of Sunbury, who bore him four sons and one daughter, two of the former being dead. He died in April, 1882. In politics he was a Democrat, and in 1875 was elected treasurer of Northumberland County by eight hundred and sixty-seven majority, and in 1879 was a candidate for State treasurer before the Democratic State Convention, but withdrew in Mr. Barr's favor. He succeeded in business, and left a large estate.

COL. ABRAM DOEBLER.

Abram Doebler, the son of Anthony Doebler, was born March 17, 1765, in Lebanon township, Lancaster, now Lebanon County, Pa. In 1777, when but twelve years of age, he was a member of Col. Curtis Grubb's Battalion of Associators in the war for independence, and was in active service at Brandywine and Germantown. After the Revolution, when the militia were organized under an act of the Congress of the United States, he became a brigade inspector of Pennsylvania troops. He assisted in enrolling the volunteers for the Whiskey Insurrection of 1794, and subsequently settled at Harrisburg, where he resided a number of years, "greatly beloved and respected," and was quite prominent in military circles. After the death of his brother David, who died in 1831, Col. Doebler returned to Lebanon, where he passed the evening of his days in quiet retirement. He died there Aug. 17, 1849, and was buried with military honors, the Washington Riflemen performing the ceremonies, while the funeral discourse was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Ernst, of the Lutheran Church, of which Col. Doebler had for many years been a member.

REV. LEWIS G. EGGERS.

Lewis G. Eggers, son of Henry Eggers and Charlotte Lambrecht, was born Feb. 14, 1805, in Leesen, Duchy of Brunswick, now part of the German empire. He was instructed and confirmed when between thirteen and fourteen years old, attending the parochial school until after his confirmation. He learned the trade of a bookbinder with Mr. Lambrecht, of Klausthal. Before he had quite finished his trade, in 1822, his parents emigrated to America, and he accompanied them thither. He worked at bookbinding for a short time at Hagerstown, Md., and later carried on the business in his own name. Determining to study for the ministry, he went to Gettysburg, where he remained five years, two in the gymnasium and three in the theological seminary. He was licensed at the annual meeting of the Evangelical Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania, at Germantown, in the year 1835. After his licensure he was urged to become a missionary in the West, but declined on the ground of his timidity. His first charge was in Nittany Valley, Centre Co., Pa. He labored in Sugar Valley and Nittany Valley, and in one church in Penn's Valley organizing two new congregations,—one at Bellefonte, the other six miles east of that town. His second pastorate was the Palmyra charge, in Lebanon and Dauphin Counties. He was pastor from 1847 to 1852, and cared for Palmyra, Campbellstown, Schell's, Bindnagel's, and Union Deposit. His third pastorate was the Tulpehocken, or Stouchsburg charge, in Berks County, from 1852 to 1867. He served Rehrersburg, Womelsdorf, Myers-town, Mill Creek, and Newmanstown. A new church was built at Myerstown during his ministry there in 1857-58, and the church at Mill Creek remodeled. He removed from Stouchsburg to Centre County in 1867, but shortly after retired for a period from the active duties of the church on account of the failure of his health, subsequently taking charge for two years of the Trevorton congregation, near Sunbury. From 1871 to 1874, when he resigned on account of his health, he was pastor of the Palmyra charge. However, he often preached during the years intervening up to his death at Brickerville, Lancaster Co., and supplied Zion's, Walmer's, and Sattazahn's, in Lebanon County, and occasionally at Lebanon, Harrisburg, and in the Ephrata charge. On Sunday, October 29th, he kindly supplied the Lutheran Church at Lautz in the morning and at Hollow Run in the afternoon, both churches of the Trevorton charge. On the following Sunday he was to preach in the church at Rehrersburg, Berks Co. On Monday morning, Oct. 30, 1882, while at the depot at Selinsgrove Junction, in Northumberland County, Pa., he sat down in a chair in the waiting-room, and died in a short time. He was buried at Palmyra on Friday, Nov. 3, 1882, and devout men were at his burial. He was a faithful, earnest, and consistent minister of the gospel. The Rev. Mr. Eggers was twice married, first to Lydia Schaeffer, daughter of Michael and Margaret Schaeffer, of Nittany Valley, who died Oct. 16, 1868, leaving one son, Luther H. Eggers, of Kansas; a daughter, wife of Rev. John W. Early, of Danville, Pa.; and another, the wife of Mr. Beck. He married, secondly, Aug. 8, 1872, Mrs. Elizabeth Kettering, of Jonestown, who survived.

MAJOR FREDERICK EMBICH.

Frederick Embich, son of John Frederick Embich and Margaret Shindel, was born Jan. 17, 1803, in Lebanon, Pa. His father was sheriff of the county, commissioned Oct. 19, 1819, and subsequently appointed by his friend, Governor Schulze, a justice of the peace "for the borough and township of Lebanon, Sept. 7, 1824, a position he held until his death. The subject of our sketch received the educational advantages afforded by the private schools of his day, and was desired by his friends to prepare for the ministry, but that profession was not suited to his taste. Early in life he became quite influential in political affairs, and under Governor Ritner's administration he was commissioned on April 28, 1836, a justice of the peace for the borough and township of Lebanon, an office he held one term. Mr. Embich especially took a prominent part in the military organizations of his day, and he first appears as lieutenant of the "Lebanon County Cavalry Company," commissioned by Governor Wolf, to rank from the 22d of February, 1833, and on the 3d of August, 1835, promoted to captain of the same company. Governor Ritner, for whose election Capt. Embich was an enthusiastic supporter, appointed him June 11, 1836, major of the Independent Battalion of Lebanon County, and from that period on he seems by the following to have been in continuous service in the volunteer militia of the State: Governor Porter commissioned him captain of the Washington Rifle Company Jan. 8, 1842; Governor Shunk, brigade major of the First Brigade, Sixth Division, composed of Dauphin, Lebanon, Berks, and Schuylkill Counties, March 28, 1845, and subsequently, by the same authority, captain of the Independent Guards, attached to the First Brigade, Fifth Division, Oct. 18, 1845. At this time one of the most conspicuous military officers in the valley of Lebanon if not in the State, it surprised many that he did not tender his services to the Governor for the war with Mexico. In the first place, the quota of troops asked from Pennsylvania was so small that it was only through favoritism and great zeal in the contest which secured acceptance, neither of which Major Embich had. He was an uncompromising Whig, opposed to the annexation of Texas, and as much so to the war, which he was wont to say was brought about to advance the interests of the Democratic party. Upon the election of Governor Johnston, that functionary commissioned him brigade inspector of the Second Brigade, Fifth Division, composed of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Berks, June 4, 1849, and renewed by Governor Bigler, July 11, 1854. By Governor Pollock he was commissioned captain of the Washington Artillery May 29, 1857, and continued in commission by Governor Packer, June 6, 1859. At the breaking out of the war for the Union, although the major's feelings and military training would have led him into the service, his health was seriously failing him, and he died on the 29th of January, 1862, aged fifty-nine years. Major Embich during the latter years of his life followed the business of an auctioneer, for which his wit and geniality admirably fitted him. Highly gifted therefore for this avocation, he was a great favorite all over the county, and the fact that he was to appear as the auctioneer was in itself an advertisement and secured a large attendance. Many of his sayings are yet quoted among the older residents.

The major was a member of Salem Lutheran Church, and served for a long time as one of its deacons. While Rev. Mr. Ruthrauff was pastor a difficulty arose, and a number of the members of the congregation proposed to depose that minister by a vote of the congregation. Major Embich was deputed to lead, and when the vote was taken the rest backed out, leaving him and his daughter Emma standing alone. The major upbraided the others for their want of courage and good faith, announced himself the friend of Mr. Ruthrauff, and continued so during his life. He was clerk to the county commissioners for three terms, nine years in all; subsequently kept the Black Bear Hotel, opposite the jail, which was then a noted resort of politicians.

Frederick Embich married, Jan. 17, 1824, Lucretia Doebler, born June 6, 1806; died Sept. 9, 1878; youngest daughter of Abraham Doebler, of Lebanon. They had twelve children, six of whom grew to mature age,—Rose, widow of Joseph Gleim, of Lebanon; Col. Frederick E., of Williamsport, in service during the Rebellion; Lucretia, married Nicholas Gillman, of Columbia; Amelia, married F. H. Ebur, formerly sheriff of Lebanon County; Emma, married Solomon Myer; and W. H. H. Embich, an officer during the war; who died a few years since.

REV. JACOB ERB.

Jacob Erb was born two miles southeast of Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 25th of May, 1804, and died at Shiremanstown, Cumberland Co., April 29, 1883, hence at the time of his death had attained to the age of seventy-eight years, eleven months, and four days. His grandfather, Christian Erb, was born in Switzerland in 1733, and was brought by his parents to this country in 1736, when only three years of age. His father, who also was called Christian, was born in Lancaster County in 1758. His maternal grandfather was Abraham Hershey, who migrated from Switzerland to America in 1759. His mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Hershey.

When Jacob was six years of age, that is, in 1810, his parents moved from Lancaster County to Cumberland County, and settled on a tract of land on the banks of the Susquehanna, opposite Harrisburg. His father died on that farm in October of 1820. Three years after, in May, 1823, Jacob became a member of the Pennsylvania Annual Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, and in sixty annual consecutive sessions never was once absent. He labored extensively in his native State, and also in the State of New York and Canada. He preached in Erie County, N. Y., and Canada as early as 1825, and was in Rochester on the day the water was let into the Erie Canal, which was on October 25th of that year. He had charge of different circuits, and was presiding elder a number of times, and was pastor of the Otterbein Church in Baltimore, Md., seven years; pastor of the First United Brethren Church in York three years; presiding elder seven years; editor of the Busy Martha, a German paper published in Baltimore, several years, and served as Bishop from 1837 till 1845, and again from 1849 till 1853. Under his labors the congregation on Boas Street, Harrisburg, was organized, and during his pastorate the first church was built on the ground now occupied by the Memorial Church.

Jacob Erb was one of the most efficient ministers of the United Brethren Church in organizing and building up that denomination in the Lebanon Valley. Other men had worked before him, but to his executive ability that denomination owes its first definite organization. In 1823 he preached on the Lancaster Circuit. It extended from Harrisburg to Lancaster, and out to Turkey Hill; thence by Columbia to Marietta, Maytown, Middletown, and Highspire; thence to Hummelstown, Union Water-Works, Annville, Lebanon, Shaefferstown, Ephrata, Manheim, and Litz. All over this field were members who were recognized as such, but they were not formed in classes and enrolled in a formal manner. Mr. Erb then regarded this as a mistake, but their minds had to be prepared for the important step to be taken in formally organizing by reception and enrollment. After the lapse of several years it appeared to Mr. Erb that the proper time had come. It was during the year 1827 that he formed the first class of church members in the United Brethren in Christ Church east of the Susquehanna River. Classes had been formed west of the river before this date. This organization took place at what is called Sherk's Old Meeting-house, located in the northwestern portion of Lebanon County, about two and a half miles east of Grantville, Dauphin Co. Some years previous about fifty persons had been converted under the ministerial labors of Rev. Felix Light. Afterwards Father Roop and other ministers preached to this people, and under Mr. Erb's ministry there was an awakening and many others were converted. It now became evident to Mr. Erb that permanent success and prosperity could be secured only by a well-defined organization, and after consultation with older ministers obtained their consent to allow him to make the trial. In accordance with his design, he announced at his Sabbath services that he intended to receive members into church next evening. When Monday evening arrived a large congregation assembled, and quite a number joined the church. The plan worked so admirably that soon it became the prevailing custom.

Sherk's meeting-house was built by the Mennonites in the year 1822, Peter Sherk and wife deeding to Jacob Sherk, trustee, in trust for the Mennonites, the ground on which it is erected, and in 1845, by the authority of the Legislature, he sold the property to Jacob Albert, H. Neidig, and George Bongardner, trustees, in trust for the church of the United Brethren in Christ. It was early occupied by the United Brethren preachers, chief of whom were Revs. Felix Light, Roop, Erb, Funkhouser, John Light, and Casper Light.

Three years after this Mr. Erb was the minister on the Halifax Circuit. He was acquainted with Elder John Winebrenner, and sympathized with him in his revival work. These ministers were well acquainted, and often were engaged in holding meetings together. Elder Winebrenner was his senior by seven years, and after he had, from a change of views, withdrawn from the German Reformed Church, he engaged Mr. Erb to baptize him. On the Sabbath appointed for that service a large congregation assembled in the Bethel on Mulberry Street, Harrisburg, where now the hospital stands. Elder Winebrenner then preached what is now known as the 1830 sermon on baptism. Immediately after preaching, and soon after three o'clock, P.M., they proceeded to the Susquehanna River, and Mr. Erb baptized him just above where now the railroad bridge is. This occurred on Sabbath, July 4, 1830.

REV. JOHN FREDERICK ERNST.

John Frederick Ernst was born Oct. 30, 1786, in Sussex County, N. J., baptized on the 3d of November following, and confirmed in the Lutheran Church on the 17th of August, 1800. He entered Princeton College, from which he graduated in 1808, at once commenced the study of theology, and in 1809 began his ministerial labors. In 1815 he removed to Lebanon, where for a period of nearly thirty-five years he was pastor of the Salem Church there. He died at Lebanon on the 1st of September, 1849, aged almost sixty-three years. He was an earnest, faithful, and diligent preacher of the gospel. He was twice married, first, in 1815, to Elizabeth McCammon, daughter of John and Mary McCammon, who died May 18, 1829, leaving several children; secondly, on March 5, 1845, to Susan Herman, daughter of John and Catharine Herman, of Philadelphia, and they had one son.

REV. RICHARD A. FISHER.

Richard Adams Fisher, son of John Fisher, was born Oct. 25, 1805, in Heidelberg township, Berks Co., Pa. He was brought up on his father's farm, but at a comparatively early age his thoughts were bent to the ministry, and he commenced his preparatory studies under his pastor, the Rev. F. Herman, of the Reformed Church, subsequently completing his theological course with the Rev. Dr. Herman, of Montgomery County. In 1826 he was licensed and ordained, and soon after received and accepted a call to the Sunbury charge in Northumberland County, Pa. Few men had more labors in the ministry to perform or greater difficulties to encounter. He had to contend with hardships innumerable, with extent of country, which, it is said, required in the performance of his ordinary duties not less than fifty or sixty thousand miles of travel. He served a large number of congregations, which imposed on him great physical labor, and he had to contend with the inconveniences of a mountainous country and the unusual amount of exposure to the inclemencies of the weather; and with not a vigorous constitution it is not surprising that his physical system soon gave way. In the hope to find some relief, he accepted a call from the Millersburg charge in Dauphin County, Pa., in 1856, but his labors here were of short duration, and he ended his career on the 27th of January, 1857, dying at the parsonage in Lykens Valley in his fifty-second year. He was interred at Sunbury. Mr. Fisher married, in 1831, Amelia Catharine Weiser, daughter of the Rev. George Weiser, of Sunbury, and they had six sons and four daughters.

COL. WILLIAM G. FREEMAN.

William Grigsby Freeman was born in 1815 in the State of Virginia. He entered West Point Military Academy in 1830, appointed from his native State, from which institution he graduated in 1834, and commissioned brevet second lieutenant in the Fourth United States Artillery on the 1st of July that year. He served with distinction in the Florida war against the Seminole Indians, was promoted second lieutenant June 8, 1836, first lieutenant July 7, 1838, and brevet captain, assistant adjutant-general, Dec. 2, 1841, and subsequently captain, Sept. 13, 1846. He was with the army in Mexico, and for meritorious services there was promoted brevet major, assistant adjutant-general, March 3, 1847, and brevet lieutenant-colonel, May 30, 1848. In 1849 he was on the staff of Gen. Winfield Scott, with headquarters at New York City. He resigned the service March 31, 1856, and took up his residence at Cornwall, where he died in 1866. Col. Freeman was a brave and gallant officer. He married Margaret Coleman, daughter of Bird Coleman.

HON. JOHN GLONINGER.

John Gloninger, son of Philip and Anna Barbara Gloninger, was born Sept. 19, 1758, in Lebanon township, then Lancaster County, Pa. His ancestors were among the earliest settlers in that locality. His father, born in 1719, died Dec. 11, 1796; his mother, born March 12, 1731, died Sept. 23, 1810, and are both buried in the old Reformed Church Cemetery at Lebanon. John Gloninger received most of his instruction from the pastor of the Reformed Church, who was also teacher of the school. When the Revolution broke out he served as a subaltern officer in the associators. Towards the close of the war he was in command of the battalion of militia. Upon the organization of the county of Dauphin he was appointed, by the Supreme Executive Council county, lieutenant May 6, 1785. He was a representative to the General Assembly in 1790, resigning to accept the position of State Senator, which office he also in time resigned, preferring the quiet of home life to the vexations of legislative experience. He was appointed by Governor Mifflin—a warm personal friend—one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin. This position, owing to the distance and the inconvenience of travel, he afterwards resigned. However, upon the erection of the new county of Lebanon, in 1813, he was commissioned one of the associate judges, an office he filled many years. He died at Lebanon on the 22d of January,

HON. JOHN GLONINGER.

1836, aged seventy-seven years. Few men had more extended influence, and were more highly respected and beloved, than Judge Gloninger. He married Catharine Orth, daughter of Adam and Catharine (Kucher) Orth; and they were the ancestors of a prominent family, most of whom left a marked impression upon the period in which they lived.

REV. PHILIP GLONINGER.

Philip Gloninger, son of John and Catharine (Orth) Gloninger, was born Feb. 17, 1788, in Lebanon, Pa. Having acquired the necessary preparatory education in the schools of his native town he entered Dickinson College, where he early completed his literary course. Subsequently he studied divinity under the Rev. C. L. Becker, D.D., of Baltimore, one of the most distinguished theologians and pulpit orators of the age. At a meeting of the Reformed Synod, held at Germantown in the autumn of 1808, Mr. Gloninger was present, and presented a call from the Reformed Church at Harrisburg, with the request that he be "placed over them as their pastor." At the same Synod he was ordained. Beside the congregation at Harrisburg there were four others in his charge,—Shoop's, Wenrich's, Middletown, and Hummelstown. He soon became prominent in his church, and was appointed by Synod one of the first two delegates sent by that body to the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church. Owing to "bodily infirmities," he resigned his charge in June, 1814. He returned to Lebanon, where he died on the 10th of September, 1816, at the early age of twenty-eight years. The Rev. Gloninger was a man of superior pulpit talents, naturally gifted, and reared under circumstances highly favorable to the development of his moral and intellectual endowments, he became distinguished as a preacher, and early attained a prominent position among his ministerial brethren. He was a faithful pastor, and our paternal grandmother, who was one of his parishioners, in her fourscore years, spoke very tenderly of the youthful preacher, Gloninger, so dearly beloved and highly esteemed. The Rev. Gloninger married, in 1810, Eliza Clark, who survived her husband many years.

C. D. GLONINGER, M.D.

Cyrus Dorsey Gloninger, eldest son of Dr. John W. Gloninger and Mary Ann Hassinger, was born March 13, 1824, at Lebanon. His preliminary studies were pursued at the Lebanon Academy, after which he entered Marshall College, then at Mercersburg, from whence he graduated in 1843. He began the study of medicine with his father, attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, graduating in 1846. The two following years were spent in the medical universities and hospitals of Europe, his accurate and familiar acquaintance with the French and German languages greatly facilitating his studies in the scientific centres of the Old World. Returning home, commenced the practice of medicine, and shortly acquired a marked reputation for ability and skill in every department of his profession. Like his father, he devoted much of his attention to diseases of the eye, and, in the course of twenty-six years, attained a high rank in this important specialty. He was strictly scientific and regular, faithful to his patients and honorable to his professional brethren. He instructed a large number of students, giving them the benefit of his great attainments and ripe experience, many of whom are leading men in their profession. Aside from the science of medicine, Dr. Gloninger's literary studies were extensive. He was especially well informed in an active and zealous member. His private charities were numerous, and he gave a willing support to the various evangelical and Christianizing enterprises of the day. The poor found in him a friend, and his professional life was a philanthropic mission. He died on the 23d of August, 1872, at Lebanon, and "devout men were at his burial." In the eloquent language of his friend and pastor, "beneath the green turf and the floweret's bloom, he shall rest in peace. The eye of friendship will often dim as it rests upon the hallowed spot. The utterance of many a heart will be, 'Here lies one we have loved!' The balmy breath of spring and the vitalizing shower of summer will quicken and revive his vernal covering."

all that relates to the collateral sciences, and his knowledge of sacred and profane history, strengthened by travel and observation, made him an agreeable and entertaining companion. His contributions to various journals and periodicals showed a highly cultivated mind. As a public man he was greatly esteemed; was twice nominated by the Democratic party, of which he was an adherent, candidate for Congress, in 1866 and in 1870, but defeated, owing to the strength of the opposition in his district. In the industrial enterprises of his native town he took a warm interest. He was one of the founders of the Lebanon Manufacturing Company, of which he was president; he was president of the Lebanon National Bank, and in his church, St. John's Reformed, was

JOHN W. GLONINGER, M.D.

John W. Gloninger, son of John Gloninger and Catharine Orth, was born Sept. 23, 1798, at Lebanon, Pa. His early educational training was under the direction of that famous local pedagogue, McMullen, who for so many years wielded the "birch" in Lebanon. Afterwards he was sent to Harrisburg, and from thence to Baltimore, where he completed his academic education. Late in 1815 he returned to Lebanon, and commenced the study of medicine with Dr. King. Early in 1816 he went to Philadelphia, and became a private pupil of Professor Dorsey, then in the height of his fame, at the same time attending lectures in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania and Blockley Hospital. In 1817 he was elected a member of the Philadelphia Medical Society. He continued his studies in Philadelphia until the death of Professor Dorsey, which occurred in 1818, when he went with the majority of Dr. Dorsey's private pupils to New York. Here he entered the office of the distinguished Professor Hosack, at the same time attending the lectures in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, where he graduated April 1, 1819. After graduating he continued his studies in the hospitals of New York and Philadelphia, and early in 1820 returned to his native place, where he commenced the practice of medicine.

He soon took a leading position as a physician and surgeon, and maintained it for thirty years. As a general practitioner he was careful, attentive, and distinguished for his accuracy of diagnosis; as a surgeon he was eminent, but his specialty was diseases of the eye, and as an oculist he ranked among the best in the country, being particularly successful in operations for cataract. For the first twenty years of his professional career he was a frequent contributor to the medical journals. Many of the articles show that he was not alone a careful observer but a close student, and that he was keeping pace with the progress of medical science. As an evidence of his appreciation by the profession, we find that in 1823 he was elected a member of the Pittsburgh Medical Society, and in 1826 Fellow of the University of New York, and Jefferson Medical College conferred upon him the honorary degree of M.D. In 1838 he was elected an honorary member of the New York State Medical Society, and in 1841 the University of Maryland conferred the honorary degree of M.D. upon him, the University of Pennsylvania doing the same in 1848.

In his intercourse with his professional brethren he strictly adhered to the code of ethics, and was mainly instrumental in the organization of the Lebanon County Medical Society, and for many years one of its active members, doing all he could to promote professional intercourse and the advancement of its members. There are now scattered over this country many pupils who all bear testimony to the interest he took and the encouragement he gave them in the prosecution of their studies. In some instances he not only instructed them gratuitously, but furnished them with means to finish their medical education. In fact, one of his characteristic traits was the interest he took in young men just starting out in life.

After the death of William Moore, Esq., in March, 1841, he was elected president of the Lebanon Bank, a position which he held until Jan. 14, 1867, when he declined a re-election. As a financier he was conservative, always having more confidence in real estate than any other form of investment. Although careful in the management of his estate, it can with truth be said of him that he practiced his profession not from a desire to obtain pecuniary recompense, but from the love of it and the good he could accomplish.

Until he began to withdraw from active professional life, his time and services were commanded by all alike.

He always took a deep interest in the Reformed Church, and was mainly instrumental in remodeling the First Church, at Lebanon, about 1844, and later in the founding and building of St. John's Church. He freely contributed of his means to all church enterprises, and for many years was a trustee of Marshall College, and was also one the founders and trustees of the Lebanon Academy. He died March 10, 1874, at Lebanon. Dr. Gloninger was twice married,—first on Dec. 25, 1820, to Mary Ann Hassinger, of Philadelphia, who died in February, 1846. She was a woman of much culture and refinement, and the mother of all his children,—Eliza, widow of Dr. David B. Marshall, late of Lebanon; Matilda, married John Wetherill, of Philadelphia; Dr. Cyrus D. (see biographical sketch); Dr. David Stanley, practicing his profession in Philadelphia; and Catharine Alice, married Dr. A. H. Light, of Lebanon. Dr. Gloninger married, secondly, June 15, 1847, Catharine Arndt, who survived.

COL. PHILIP GREENAWALT.

Philip Lorenz Greenawalt was born June 10, 1725, in Hassloß, in Boehl, Germany. He was of one of the best-known families in that locality, received a good German and classical education, and came to America in 1749, on the ship "Phoenix," John Mason, master, from Rotterdam, arriving at Philadelphia on the 15th of September. He at first located in Cocalico township, Lancaster Co., where he took up one hundred acres of land, Feb. 28, 1754, subsequently removing to Lebanon township. At the outset of the Revolution he entered heartily into the struggle, and during the entire war was more or less in active service. Upon the organization of the associated battalions he was commissioned colonel of the First Battalion of Lancaster County. He was with Washington during the Jersey campaign of 1776,—at Trenton and Princeton. His battalion was at Brandywine and Germantown, and the conduct of Col. Greenawalt during the former engagement received the commendation of the commander-in-chief for efficiency and gallantry, especially in the protection of the Continental supplies. He was appointed, May 6, 1778, one of the agents for forfeited estates. At the close of the war he retired to his farm, and, like many more of the brave officers of that struggle for independence, poorer in purse, but conscious of having done his duty to his country. The Assembly of the State appointed him one of the commissioners to take subscriptions for the Continental loan, Dec. 16, 1777, and during the darkest hour of the struggle he did effective service in collecting blankets, food, and forge for the half-starved and half-clad army at Valley Forge, and for most of which he was never recompensed. But such was the fate of many who sacrificed their fortunes on the altar of liberty. Col. Greenawalt reached a good old age, honored, loved, and respected by his neighbors and fellow-citizens. He died, Feb. 28, 1802, at Lebanon, aged seventy-seven years. Col. Greenawalt was twice married: first, to the Widow Uhland, of Muddy Creek, who died the same year; secondly, to Margaret Foesser, born May 10, 1735; died May 10, 1806. They had a large family of children. (See Greenawalt record.)

GEN. JOHN HARRISON.

John Harrison, the son of Issac and Sarah Harrison, was born in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., on the 8th of January, 1775. He received a good education, brought up on his father's farm, and at his majority engaged in the manufacture of iron. He served as county commissioner from 1807 to 1810, and in 1814 marched as a private in Capt. Thomas McIlhenny's company of volunteers to the defense of Baltimore. He was elected a member of the House of Representatives, session of 1821-22, and in 1823 to the State Senate, but resigned the year following for some cause remaining unexplained. He was brigadier-general of volunteers, and hence the title of Gen. John Harrison. He died at his residence in Hanover, Feb. 28, 1827, and is buried in the old graveyard there. He was twice married; his first wife, Frances Rodgers, born 1771; died April 15, 1813; his second wife, Rachel, born 1787; died Nov. 10, 1829. They are buried in Hanover churchyard. Gen. Harrison was a prominent and influential citizen,—upright, honorable, and high-minded, and won the respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens. A singular historical error respecting this Gen. Harrison has been printed in a report of a school superintendent of Lebanon County, and stands to this moment uncorrected save in these columns. The statement alluded to confounds Gen. Harrison of Ohio, afterwards President of the United States, with Gen. Harrison of Hanover township, Lebanon County. The former was a Virginian of a very prominent family, the latter of Pennsylvania, of the excellent Presbyterian race of Provincial days.

REV. DAVID HASSINGER.

David Hassinger was born about 1797, in Myers-town, Lebanon Co., Pa. He received a fair English and German education, but, applying himself earnestly, he mastered the classics, and commenced his theological studies under the Rev. Mr. German, of the Lutheran Church, subsequently completing them under the instruction of the Rev. Dr. Helfenstein, of the Reformed Church, Philadelphia. He entered the ministry in 1824, and his first field of labor was Newville, Cumberland Co., Pa., where he served six years. From this place he removed to Orwigsburg, Schuylkill Co., Pa., where he preached seventeen or eighteen years. He then went to Pottsville, where he remained seven or eight years, whence he removed with his family to Perry Co., Pa. He died near Ickesburg, in that county, March 3, 1858, aged sixty-one years. He was a man of some talent, of good address, and an earnest and popular preacher. The Rev. Mr. Hassinger married, in 1830, Catharine Gibson, daughter of Francis Gibson, of Perry County.

COL. NICHOLAS HAUSSEGGER.

Nicholas Haussegger came to America as a subaltern officer during the early struggle between England and France, about 1744. He was a native of the kingdom of Hanover, Germany, which may probably account for his being in the British service. He subsequently resigned and came to Pennsylvania, where we find him during the French and Indian war as lieutenant of Capt. Atlee's company of the Pennsylvania regiment, commissioned May 6, 1760. It is more than probable he was in the previous campaign under Gen. Forbes, but the rolls of officers for that period are incomplete. On the 11th of November, 1763, he was commissioned captain in the First Battalion of the Pennsylvania regiment, commanded by the Hon. John Penn, Esq., having distinguished himself at the battle of Busby Run, in the expedition under Bouquet. During the summer of 1764 he was stationed on the frontiers in Heidelberg township to guard against Indian forays from the northward. For his services in the Provincial war he participated in the land grants by the Proprietaries, and became possessed of a tract of land containing five hundred and thirty-three acres located in what is now Liberty township, Centre Co., Pa. This he seems to have disposed of before 1774 to Thomas Willing, of Philadelphia. Prior to the Revolution he purchased a farm near Lebanon, where he lived and on which he ended his days. At the commencement of the war for independence he entered heartily into the contest, and was commissioned major of the Fourth Pennsylvania Battalion, Col. Anthony Wayne, Jan. 4, 1776, and until the 18th of September following shared in the fortunes and privations of that command at Three Rivers and in the Canada campaign. Congress by a resolution, June 27, 1776, directed four companies of Germans to be raised in Pennsylvania, which was subsequently increased to five, which, with four companies in Maryland, were to compose the German battalion, and of which Maj. Nicholas Haussegger was commissioned colonel, to rank from July 17, 1776. The regiment was in the field and engaged at Trenton and Princeton, and in May, 1777, was in DeBore's brigade, Sullivan's division. It is stated in the "History of the Pennsylvania Line in the Revolution" that Col. Haussegger "deserted to the British after the battle of Monmouth, and nothing can be ascertained of his subsequent history." This statement was obtained no doubt from somebody's memoirs, which must always be taken with a few grains of allowance. As the records of the Revolution are exceedingly meagre, it is impossible to state when and how Col. Haussegger left his command. During the Sullivan expedition of 1779, Lieut.-Col. Weltner was in command of the German regiment. He is not alluded to as colonel commanding, which would have been the case had Col. Hannegger deserted to the British or resigned. The probabilities are that he was absent on sick leave, and that until the regiment was mustered out of service he was really the commanding officer. He was in 1780 on his farm in Lebanon township, where we would not have found him had he become the traitor we are led to believe; the patriots of that section would not have tolerated his presence, and his estate would have been forfeited. He died upon his farm near the borough of Lebanon, in July, 1786, and must have been ill a long time. Another point which antagonizes the charge of treason is that his heirs participated in the donation land-grants awarded by the State of Pennsylvania to its meritorious and brave officers and soldiers of the Revolution. We desire to do justice to the memory of a gallant soldier, and are delighted that the facts we have gathered will show how fallacious the charge. Col. Hannegger at his death left a wife, Elizabeth, and two daughters, married respectively Daniel Weidel and Nicholas Krehl.

REV. ANTHONY HAUTZ.

ANTHONY HAUTZ, son of Philip Peter Hantz, was born in Germany, Aug. 4, 1758. His father emigrated to America in 1768, and settled in what is now Lebanon County. He received a preliminary German education, and early in life apprenticed to the trade of a tailor, at the same time devoting all his spare moments to the acquisition of useful knowledge by means of books, which were not then as now accessible to every one. Inclined to the ministry, he studied theology with the Rev. Dr. Hendel, then pastor of a church at Lancaster. Having completed his studies he became, about the middle of the year 1786, catechist in the congregations of Cocalico, Modocreek, Reicker's, and Zeltenreich, in Lancaster County. These congregations being well pleased with his services applied to the Reformed Cötns which met in Lancaster June 5, 1787, for his examination and licensure, asking at the same time that he might be appointed as their regular pastor, which was granted. In 1788 he received and accepted a call from the congregation at Harrisburg, and became the first stationed pastor there. He remained at Harrisburg until 1798, when he accepted a call to Carlisle and the affiliating congregations of Trindle Spring, Churchtown, and Frieden's Church. The latter church had been organized by him in 1793, while ministering at Harrisburg. Having visited Seneca County, N. Y., in 1803, Mr. Hantz removed thither with his family in the spring of 1804. He began his labors in that section by gathering the scattered members of the church, and until 1815 he continued his work in the ministry faithfully, when he limited his call to Lansing and Salmon Creek congregations, in whose neighborhood he lived. After a few years' further work he retired from the pastoral office, and removed to the township of Groton, Tompkins Co., N. Y., when past the age of threescore years and ten; in 1830 he ended his busy but troubled life. The Rev. Mr. Hantz was zealous and earnest in his preaching, hospitable and kind, yet firm and determined whenever he believed it his duty to oppose. His impulsiveness, with a sanguine temperament, produced difficulties which frequently beset his ministry. For all this he was dearly beloved by many in his various congregations. In personal appearance "he was tall, slim, and meagre; had dark complexion, with a large aquiline nose."

REV. WILLIAM HIESTER.

William Hiester, son of Joseph Hiester and Elizabeth Strunk, was born Nov. 11, 1770, in Bern township, Berks Co., Pa. He was the youngest of seven children. His father, born about 1710, at Elsoff, in the Duchy of Wittgenstein, Province of Westphalia, Germany, emigrated to America in 1738, and died in 1772, in Bern township, Berks Co., Pa. He learned the trade of a carpenter, in the mean time applying himself to study. In 1796 he commenced his theological studies under the Rev. Daniel Wagner, of York, Pa., at the same time learning Greek from the Lutheran minister at the same place. At the Reformed Church Synod which met at Lancaster, Pa., April 30, 1798, he presented himself for examination, and permission was given him to serve the congregations in Donegal as a catechist. He served them one year, when, upon petition of the congregations, he was regularly ordained. At the Synod in May, 1800, the congregation at Lebanon, Pa., with three others connected with it, transmitted to Synod a call for the Rev. Mr. Hiester. He accepted the call, at the same time continuing to serve his original charge. The field was too large, but with great faithfulness and self-sacrifice he continued with all the congregations until 1808, when he surrendered the Lancaster County charge. "As a preacher," wrote Rev. Dr. Harbaugh, "Mr. Hiester was popular. He had a fine flow of language, and spoke without notes. He had an excellent memory, and it was frequently remarked that he seemed to have the entire Scriptures at his command; he could quote passages with much facility and strikingly to the point. Besides, he had a fine musical voice, which was much cultivated by singing, an exercise of which he was exceedingly fond, and in which he excelled." Being diligent in his studies, he was unwearied in his pastoral duties, and as a result his physical system began to give way under the severe mental strain. For years he was much troubled with a cough, and twelve months before his death he had an attack of hemorrhage. Notwithstanding, until within a few months of his end he continued to perform his ministerial work. He died at Lebanon, on Friday, Feb. 8, 1828, and is there buried. Mr. Hiester married Anna Maria Bentz, born May 25, 1775; died May 22, 1833. Their children were John Bentz, Maria, William, Hannah, Lydia, Joseph, George, and Cyrus.

SAMUEL HEILMAN.

Samuel Heilman, son of Philip Heilman (see Heilman record), was born in 1809, on the old homestead in North Annville township, Lebanon Co., Pa. He was brought up as a farmer, and continued upon the ancestral farm, in the cultivating and improving of which he evinced a commendable pride, until his death, which occurred on the 26th of April, 1881, in the seventy-third

MATTHIAS HOLLENBACH.

Matthias Hollenbach, son of John Hollenbach, was born about 1726, in Hanover township, Lancaster Co., now East Hanover township, Lebanon Co., where the father was an early settler. He was inured to all the sufferings and privations incident to a frontier settlement at that early day. Possessed of a firm and vigorous constitution, and endowed by nature with a strong, active, and enterprising mind, at the age of seventeen he joined the first adventurous party who went to make a permanent settlement, under the authority of Connecticut, in the valley of Wyoming. This was in the autumn of 1769. From that period year of his age. Mr. Heilman was a man of unostentatious habits, and cared little for the excitements of public life. He was a man of energy and of prominence in his neighborhood, and so peaceful and conciliatory was his character, his judgment so uniformly correct, that his services were frequently requested in the settlement of important interests. He was a director of the Lebanon Valley National Bank, and in the Reformed Church, of which he was long a member, a faithful and efficient officer. Mr. Heilman was twice married,—first, on Dec. 29, 1833, to Elizabeth Heilman, who died in 1856; secondly, on May 30, 1860, to Mary Keller, daughter of John Keller, of Centre County, who survived.

the history of his long and eventful life is identified with the history of that part of the country.

In the controversy between Pennsylvania and Connecticut he actively and firmly adhered to the latter, under whose auspices he had embarked his youthful fortunes, and whose claims he regarded as paramount to every other until the right of soil and the right of jurisdiction to the country were decreed by a competent tribunal to be in the former. From that moment he yielded obedience to the Constitution and laws of Pennsylvania, and contributed all in his power to quiet the turbulent, and to reconcile the disaffected to the legitimate authorities.

The dispute between Pennsylvania and Connecticut had assumed all the characteristics of a civil war, and notwithstanding the conciliatory recommendations and remonstrances of the Continental Congress, it was continued during the Revolutionary struggle. Whilst the poor and destitute settlers were suffering on the one side from the common enemies of the country, the British, the savage Indians, and the worse than savage Tories, they were attacked on the other, and endured equal distress, by military parties under the authority of Pennsylvania.

Thus surrounded with difficulties and dangers calculated to appall the stoutest heart, at a period, too, when many good but timid men doubted, hesitated, and feared, young Hollenbach, in want of everything but personal courage and patriotic feelings, was approached by one of those agents of the mother-country, whose bland and fascinating manner and duplicity of heart marked him out as a fit emissary for "treason, stratagem, and spoil." On the one hand the effort making to free the country from British dominion was represented as entirely hopeless, and that upon failure, poverty, shame, and death everywhere awaited the active partisan; on the other, by espousing the cause of the British king, money, office, and honor would be conferred, and a life of ease and independence secured. The youth stood firm; he was not to be allured from the path of duty. He had taken his resolution, staked his all upon the issue, and was willing to abide the result.

In 1776 and the following years two companies were raised in Wyoming, in one of which young Hollenbach was appointed lieutenant. He was active and successful in filling up and preparing his company for active service, and shortly after joined the army under Gen. Washington, in the State of New Jersey. His merits were soon discovered and properly appreciated by the general, who frequently consulted him in relation to the frontier settlements and the means of defending them against the incursions of the enemy. He participated in all the sufferings of our half-fed and half-clothed troops during the winter campaign in the State of New Jersey, and was on several occasions employed by the general in the execution of confidential agencies.

Such was the patriotism of the Wyoming settlers that, during the short period when they were not immediately threatened with attacks from the enemy, almost every efficient man among them joined the army, and left their families without protection. This calm portended a storm. The defenseless state of the frontier invited aggression. The valley again began to suffer from the tomahawk, scalping-knife, and firebrand, and early in 1778 it was discovered that a horde of British, Indians, and Tories was collected upon the Susquehanna frontiers, and preparing to pour down upon the valley of Wyoming and exterminate the defenseless settlers. The officers from Wyoming urged the general to send a force for its protection, or to permit the two companies drawn from this settlement to return for the purpose of defending their aged and helpless parents, wives, and children. But such was the situation of the army that no adequate force could be spared. An intense anxiety was felt among the officers; some obtained furloughs, and some resigned and returned to the valley. Every preparation was made in their power to repel their invaders. About three hundred and fifty men marched out to meet the enemy. They were drawn into an ambuscade. The result is known: Wyoming was reduced to widowhood and orphanage. About fifty only escaped this disastrous battle, of whom the subject of this notice was one.

Articles of capitulation were made, in which security and protection of life and property had been stipulated, but were no sooner made than they were violated on the part of the faithless enemy. What property could not be carried away was burned and destroyed, and the remnant of the settlers was driven naked and houseless to the surrounding mountains. Lieut. Hollenbach, whose property was all destroyed, still clung to the valley, and participated in all its sufferings until the conclusion of the war.

Upon the settlement of the controversy between Pennsylvania and Connecticut, and upon the promulgation of the laws of Pennsylvania in the disputed territory of 1786, Mr. Hollenbach was chosen and appointed one of the justices of the courts of Luzerne County; and upon the adoption of the Constitution he was reappointed an associate judge, which office he sustained with reputation till the time of his decease. He was honored with the command of a regiment by his fellow-citizens,—a military office being almost the only one in Pennsylvania compatible with that of a judge.

In all the great political struggles which have agitated the country, Judge Hollenbach was actively and firmly attached to the cause of the people. In a late conflict, although most of those around him with whom he had been accustomed to act entertained different views, and although he was exceedingly enfeebled by disease, he procured himself to be carried to the poll, and there, for the last time, exercised the right of suffrage in favor of a distinguished individual who succeeded to the Presidency. He was firmly persuaded that the interests of the country demanded this preference, and he acted accordingly.

It is believed that he was not a member of any Christian church, but it is known that he revered the religion of the cross. Throughout his life he contributed liberally to the support of that communion and its pastors to which he was conscientiously attached, and it is feared it will long feel the want of his supporting hand. His life was a life of temperance, industry, and attention to his business, the full fruits of which he enjoyed in almost uninterrupted health until his last illness.

JACOB KARCH, Sr.

Jacob Karch, Sr., was born in Germany in 1742, subsequently came to America, and in 1790 was appointed postmaster at Lebanon, at the time the office was established at that place. He died Aug. 19, 1819, when his son, Jacob, Jr., was appointed to fill the vacancy. He was born Sept. 17, 1779, and died Sept. 24, 1834. His widow, Catharine Karch, was appointed as his successor in office, and held the position until July, 1845. The post-office at Lebanon was held by the Karch family for fifty-five years, and in the same building during that period, viz., at the old Karch homestead.

CAPT. ANTHONY KELKER.

Anthony Kelker, son of Henry Kelker and Regula Braetscher, was a native of Herrliberg, near Zurich, Switzerland, born on the 30th of December, 1733. At the age of ten years, in 1743, his parents emigrated to America and located in Lebanon township, Lancaster Co., now Lebanon Co., Pa., four miles north of the town of Lebanon. Anthony was brought up on his father's farm, receiving the meagre advantages of the schools of that period. He was commissioned Aug. 28, 1775, lieutenant in the Second Battalion of Lancaster County Associators, and was in active service during the campaign of 1776. In 1777 he was an officer in the militia at Brandywine and Germantown. He was appointed Jan. 19, 1778, wagon-master of Col. Greenawalt's battalion, and the same year was sent on a secret expedition to Virginia and Maryland. Until the close of the war, Capt. Kelker was an active participant. He was deputy sheriff of Lancaster County in 1781-82, and upon the formation of the county of Dauphin was commissioned the first sheriff in 1785, and subsequently elected, serving until 1788. He was a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives 1793-94. He was a very active member and vestryman of the German Reformed Church, and treasurer of the same during the erection of the old (First) Reformed Church in 1794. Mr. Kelker died at Lebanon on the 10th of March, 1812. He married Mary Magdalene, daughter of George Meister, a Moravian. She died at Lebanon, Dec. 30, 1818. (See Kelker record.) Mr. Kelker was a man of strict integrity, an unflinching patriot, and highly esteemed by his fellow-citizens.

JACOB KIMMERLING.

Jacob Kimmerling, born about 1710 in Switzerland, emigrated to America about the year 1729, and located on a tract of land north of the borough of Lebanon, on the Tulpehocken Creek, where he built a cabin, or rather a log house, not far from where the present residence of Moses Light stands. In his day he was widely known as an enterprising and benevolent citizen. Shortly after his settlement he donated land for a Reformed Church, a parochial school, and a graveyard. The church was erected mainly through Mr. Kimmerling's generosity, and the school adjoining was largely sustained by his means. He died in 1793, and the family has become extinct, but the record of his good deeds preserves the name of Jacob Kimmerling.

LEVI KLINE.

Levi Kline, son of Jacob Kline (1745-1826) and Elizabeth Withers (1748-1827), was born Oct. 14, 1811, at Wrightsville, York Co., Pa. His father dying while Levi was only fifteen years of age, he was placed in the care of his brother, George W., who educated him, and in the year 1830 was entered as a student-at-law in his office. He was admitted to the Lebanon County bar on the 6th of November, 1834, and immediately became connected with his brother as junior partner, a law firm which was only dissolved by the death of the former in 1845. From 1841 to 1846 he represented his district in the Senate of Pennsylvania. Mr. Kline died Sept. 17, 1863, at Lebanon.

GEORGE W. KLINE.

George Washington Kline, Sr., son of Jacob Kline (1745-1826) and Elizabeth Withers (1748-1827), was born March 12, 1795, at Wrightsville, York Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Wrightsville and Lancaster, and studied law at the latter place under William Jenkins, a prominent lawyer of the county. He was admitted to the bar after an examination by Amos Ellmaker, Morton C. Rogers, and James Buchanan, Esqs., on the 20th of August, 1821, and in September following located at Lebanon, where he established himself in his profession and built up a large clientage. Although prominently identified with the old Whig party, which was dominant in his county, he uniformly declined official positions, preferring the duties of professional life. He died at Lebanon on the 21st of June, 1845, aged fifty years. With strong natural sense, rare force of will, and unswerving application to the study of his profession, he attained a high position at the bar, and by his strict integrity and courteous manners acquired a commanding place in the community. Mr. Kline married, March 3, 1823, Catharine Lineaweaver, daughter of Peter and Susanna Lineaweaver, of Lebanon, who died March 19, 1871. They had Matilda, Henrietta, d. s. p., and George W.

CAPT. DAVID KRAUSE.

David Krause, Sr., son of John Krause, of the Palatinate, Germany, was born about 1750, in Lebanon township, Lebanon Co., Pa., and was a farmer by occupation. During the Revolutionary war he was an active participant, commanded a company of Associators in the Jersey campaign of 1776, and the campaign around Philadelphia in 1777, subsequently commissary of Col. Greenawalt's battalion. He was elected a member of the Assembly from Dauphin County in 1785, and under the Constitution of 1790 served in the House of Representatives from 1797 to 1799. From 1795 to 1797 he was one of the commissioners of Dauphin County. He was subsequently appointed by Governor Snyder one of the associate judges of the county of Lebanon, holding the position at his death, which occurred in 1822. Judge Krause married Regina, youngest daughter of Adam Orth and Catharine Kucher, of Lebanon. She died at Lebanon in 1846, well advanced in years.

HON. DAVID KRAUSE.

David Krause, Jr., the youngest son of David Krause and Regina Orth, was born Nov. 2, 1800, at Journal, which he conducted with much ability. In January, 1845, a vacancy occurring in the Montgomery and Bucks County judicial district, Mr. Krause was appointed to that bench. He filled the position acceptably and honorably, but, in 1851, when the judiciary became elective, he positively declined the office. He then retired to private life. In 1862, and again in 1863, upon the invasion of Pennsylvania by the Confederates, he volunteered as a private soldier in the Pennsylvania militia, although then in the sixty-third year of his age. He died at Norristown, on the 13th of June, 1871. Judge Krause married, in September, 1825, Catharine Orr, of Philadelphia, who survived her husband four years.

A. F. Kuhlmann

Lebanon. He was educated under Rev. Mr. Ernst, of the Lutheran Church at Lebanon, and subsequently studied law with Hon. Jonathan Walker, of Pittsburgh, and there admitted to the bar. He returned to Lebanon, and began practice. He came to Harrisburg as the private secretary of Governor Schulze, and was admitted to the Dauphin courts Aug. 15, 1825. He was appointed deputy attorney-general in August, 1826, and reappointed in 1829. From 1825 to 1826, with Gen. Simon Cameron, he published and edited the Pennsylvania Intelligencer. He was elected a member of the House of Representatives in 1835 and 1836. On the election of Governor Porter, in 1839, he took editorial charge of the State

REV. A. F. KUHLMANN.

Aloysius Francis Kuhlmann, late rector of the Church of the Assumption, Lebanon, Pa., was born in the city of Philadelphia, on Oct. 4, 1845. He was educated for the Catholic priesthood in St. Charles Seminary in his native city, and was ordained a priest of the Holy Roman Church on Aug. 22, 1869, receiving his appointment as pastor in Lebanon on September 17th of the same year. He had only been connected with the parish for a short period before his zeal in the cause of the church led him to conceive the idea of supplanting the old house of worship of his parish with a new and substantial structure, and he at once set to work to carry out what at that time seemed an almost impossible task. Commencing with the smallest of contributions from the youngest and humblest members of his flock, the amount gradually grew to large proportions, until, by patient assiduity and careful and prayerful solicitation, a sufficient sum had been raised to justify the beginning of the work. In course of time the magnificent structure that now constitutes the sanctuary of the parish was completed, the total cost approximating the large sum of seventy thousand dollars. Formal services of consecration by the bishop and assisting clergy were held on Dec. 18, 1880. Less than one year after that date Father Kuhlmann was seized by the fell hand of disease, and on Nov. 22, 1881, was called away to receive his reward. In the discharge of his pastoral duties he manifested a zeal and fidelity that commended him to the love and veneration of his people, and his intercourse with the world at large was marked by a kindness and affability of manner that made him extremely popular with the citizens of Lebanon of all denominations of Christian belief among whom he labored. Cut off in the prime of life, and in the midst of successful work, his loss was greatly felt by the church and the community in which he dwelt. He was a pleasant and instructive preacher, with a voice whose melody captivated and entranced the hearer. His charity was not circumscribed by a narrow creed, for no one ever went from his door empty-handed. While faithful and true to his church, he was tolerant and respectful to others, and esteemed them no less for not being of his creed. In a word, he was thoroughly Catholic in his feelings towards all.

WILLIAM LEHMAN.

Among those, while not natives of the county, yet whose long and useful lives have been chiefly identified with its history and interests and progress, one of the most prominent and widely known was William Lehman, formerly resident engineer and general superintendent of the Union Canal, whose benign and venerable personal aspect and genial manners are still so well remembered by many of our people. A native of what was once known as "the long street town," Germantown, then in Philadelphia County, but now a part of that great and more comprehensive city, he removed to the interior of the State in the year 1824. Of ancient German origin, the family name, before becoming anglicized on American soil, had the more German termination of the double n, being originally Lehmann. His ancestors, commencing in their native land, recorded and preserved with remarkable completeness and continuity, in a volume of rare interest, their genealogy for centuries, tracing their forefathers from the year 1542. The title-page of the volume alluded to is,—

"Tabula, Alias Genealogie Parentale,
Majorum Familie Antiquæ
Christiani Lehman,
Natus Dresdensis,
Electorate Saxonie Metropolis
Regione Germanie Europeæ."

For a long period after the commencement of this genealogy, astrology, although described by an epigrammatic writer, as compared with astronomy, as the foolish mother and astronomy as its wise daughter, was still much in force in connection with the births of members of families, and the volume exhibits, in regular order through numerous generations, the "nativities" of each son and daughter carefully calculated and shown, with various and curious accompanying signs, figures, and illustrations. As has been said on the subject of the horoscope of Wallenstein, carefully preserved at Vienna as a most interesting relic, he lived in an age when astrology was still regarded as a science, when the most eminent philosophers devoted their whole lives to the elucidation of its mysteries, and prince, priest, peasant, the most exalted and learned, as well as the most humble, alike felt its influence. Even as late as the year 1768 it would appear that this had not entirely ceased, as is shown by recorded correspondence between the grandfather of William Lehman and the eminent astronomer, David Rittenhouse, on the subject of finding "mean time" and "apparent time" in connection with the calculation of nativities.

The direct descent was from "John George Lehman, born in 1558, at Trebgen, eight English miles from Dresden, the metropolis of Saxony, in the Misnian Circle in the Electorate of Saxony." He was farmer-general of the revenues and lands of the manor of that borough, and died there in 1628. His father, Henry, had also been steward of the revenues of the said manor. Through regular succeeding generations the record reaches the life of Godfrey Lehman, the great-grandfather of the subject of this biography, who was born at Putzkou, subsequently residing in the city of Dresden, but in the year 1725 he "removed thence unto the town of Herrnhuth (belonging to the famous religious Count Nicholas Lewis of Zinzendorf), situate in the Marquisate of Upper Lusatia, in the Electorate of Saxony, about fifty English miles from Dresden. He there, at great cost, erected a large and substantial stone house, and lived five years, when, dissenting from the communion of the Moravian brethren there, and thereby incurring the ill-will of the count and bishop, suffered much loss by being compelled to dispose of his property on the best terms he could make in order to remove from that place." He then, as a widower, concluded to remove with his two surviving sons, Christian and John, to Pennsylvania, and accordingly left Herrnhuth for that purpose in April, 1731, sailing from Rotterdam, stopping on the voyage at Dover, England, finally arriving at Philadelphia in October of the same year, and settled soon after in Germantown. He died there Oct. 4, 1756. As a remarkable after-occurrence, subsequent to his removal with his sons from Herrnhuth, in Germany, they were followed to their new location in Pennsylvania by their former religious antagonist, Count Zinzendorf, in the year 1741, who remained for some time with those of his own religious faith at Germantown, and preached there and at Bethlehem. The son Christian, born Nov. 7, 1714, was the grandfather of William Lehman, and pursued in Germantown the occupation of surveyor and conveyancer, and subsequently removing to Philadelphia was commissioned by the Hon. John Penn, then Proprietary and Governor, to be a "Notary and Tabellion," which office he held to the time of his death, the 28th of December, 1774. His son, Benjamin, lumber merchant in Germantown, was born there Jan. 14, 1760, and died in the same place Jan. 7, 1840, aged nearly eighty years. His wife was Elizabeth Keyser, daughter of Peter Keyser, of Germantown. The coat of arms of their ancient German family represents, by various emblematic devices, that Dirk Keyser, whose name it bears, was a silk merchant and manufacturer in Amsterdam, the family having removed to Holland on account of religious persecution in Germany. At the time of the Reformation the representatives of the Keyser family were among the first to accept the doctrines of Luther, and as a consequence, as their family record states, Leonard Keyser was publicly burnt at the stake at Scharding, Bavaria, in August, 1527. From Holland, Dirk Keyser emigrated to America in 1688 as one of the first settlers at Germantown. The wife of Benjamin Lehman was born at Germantown, Jan. 30, 1763, and died there Sept. 23, 1826.

On the 28th of November, 1811, William Lehman married Mary Bringham, daughter of Samuel and Susanna Bringham, of Germantown, and their children were four sons and one daughter, named respectively Lorenzo L., Elhanan, Benjamin B., Susanna E., and Samuel B. Mrs. Lehman was born at Germantown, Aug. 24, 1787, and died at Lebanon, July 28, 1871. The only daughter married Dr. Robert S. Woddrop, of Philadelphia.

The education of William Lehman was such as he could obtain from the limited facilities then afforded by his native place, and the opportunities of which it was in his power to avail himself, but was chiefly in accordance with the saying that "the most valuable part of a man's education is that which he receives from himself." His occupation at Germantown was that of a builder and machinist, which he very skillfully pursued there for many years, and many of the stately and comfortable old-time and old-style residences, as well as various other structures in that neighborhood (some yet remaining), before the changes wrought by more modern ideas, and the "Renaissance," and "Eastlake," and "Queen Anne," and others were undreamed of, were the work of his hands. A favorite and special branch of his work in the erection of dwelling-houses was the construction of "circular" staircases. But his life history has been chiefly identified with the progress and fortunes of the Union Canal.

In the year 1824, when the revival of the project of that then great work took place under its energetic president, Samuel Mifflin, and was in active progress as well as it could then be, William Lehman was called from his home and occupation at Germantown to perform an important part in the prosecution of the "internal improvements" of the State, and appointed by the managers as their superintendent of carpentry. To assume the duties of this position, he first removed to Womelsdorf, Berks Co., where he resided one year. Then, in the progress of the work, he removed to Lebanon, having been appointed the resident engineer and general superintendent of the canal and all its works. After residing for some time in the town, and latterly in the stone mansion then the property, as it had been the residence of Governor John Andrew Shulze, but now known as the Weidman house, he built for the Union Canal Company, for the residence of their superintendent and their collectors' office, of brick taken from Weston's locks of "the old canal" (as it was then called) of 1794. That building then stood emphatically "solitary and alone" on its site on the Union Canal basin, now northeast corner of Ninth and Maple Streets, no other being within a considerable distance, and nothing but open fields south of the canal to the town, at what is now Church Street. Here, from the time of taking possession of the new residence in 1828, opened to him a busy and eventful career for over two decades more of his life in the prosecution of his arduous official duties and of more calm and agreeable pursuits, of which he was exceedingly fond, and relaxation in his hours of private leisure, the cultivation of his attractive garden and its many fruits and flowers. Besides, he was a well-known authority in botanical knowledge in general; he built the first green- and hot-houses in the vicinity of Lebanon, and his valuable collections of rare and curious exotic and other plants, from various climes, attracted admiring visitors from far and near. He was a close observer of the weather and its various phases and indications before the "Vennoirs" and the "Wig-ginses," and others of their kind, arose to tell others what they thought they knew better than others, and was his own "signal service" system. One of the comparatively few who kept a regular diary, this practice was continued to within a few days of the time when both pen and time were for him no more. He was one of the first stockholders of the first Lebanon Bank, and when the privilege of becoming such was no trifling undertaking in the rush and crush then made to secure its stock. He introduced many new and useful ideas in practical matters, and was to no small extent the instructor of many of the crude mechanics and artisans of the neighborhood. Of strong religious convictions, great knowledge of the Scriptures, and at all times ready to "bear his testimony" to his belief, he was a frequent "speaker" among the people of his own religious persuasion, the "German Baptists" or "Dunkers," and sometimes among others. He was a diligent reader of the news of the day and observer of events; and although taken from those of mortal life before the culmination of "the impending crisis," he had strong apprehensions of a war, sooner or later, between the North and South on the subject of slavery, and prophetically remarked that "although he would not live to see it, he had not the slightest doubt that his children would, adding at the same time that "of all wars between man and man, none was so fearful and deplorable as a civil war."

In the year 1848 he resigned his charge of the works of the Union Canal, and was succeeded in that position by his son, B. B. Lehman, who had long been his assistant in its various duties. He then, in the retirement of private life, besides long being an active director of the Lebanon Bank, and otherwise continuing his habit of busy occupation and congenial association, devoted the remainder of his days chiefly to agriculture and the kindred pursuits of earlier days. He died at his North Lebanon residence after a brief illness, in the month of September, 1860, in the seventy-sixth year of his age, and was interred among "the forefathers of the hamlet" and many departed relatives, in the German Baptist Cemetery adjoining the well-known old meeting-house of that denomination, near the upper end of Germantown, his native place.

REV. JOHN NICHOLAS KURTZ.

John Nicholas Kurtz was born in October, 1722, at Seitzlinden, in the principality of Nassau-Weilburg, Germany. He was descended from a Protestant family whose lineage is found recorded as far back as 1599, a large proportion of the male part of which were employed in the kindred occupations of teacher, minister, and professor. He received his early education under the direction of his father, who was at the head of a gymnasium in his native place. When he was in his fifteenth year he was transferred to the high school at Giessen, an institution furnishing the best advantages to young men destined to the ministry. Having studied there for seven years, he joined the University of Halle, where he remained six months, and there he profited greatly by his intercourse with the celebrated Francke, who was then just in the meridian of his usefulness. His professors observing that he had a vigorous constitution as well as other more important qualifications for the missionary work, began soon to think of him as a suitable person to undertake a mission to America. Accordingly, having completed his preparatory course, and expressed a willingness to engage in this field of labor, in 1744 he received the appointment, and reached this country with several other missionaries on the 15th of January, 1745. On landing at Philadelphia he met a cordial welcome from the Rev. Dr. Muhlenberg, pastor of the Lutheran Church of that city. He was invited to New Hanover, now Montgomery County, Pa., where for two years he preached on the Sabbath, and taught a school during the week. Thence he removed to Tulpehocken, where he remained only one year, his services being more loudly called for by the people of Germantown and the neighboring congregations.

In the year 1748, at the first meeting of the Lutheran Synod, Mr. Kurtz, who before had been only a licentiate, was duly ordained to the ministry, being the first in the Lutheran Church in this country. There were six clergymen present, two of whom were Swedish Lutherans. The same year he returned to the Tulpehocken and Heidelberg charge, in accordance with the earnest and repeatedly expressed wishes of the congregations to which he had previously ministered. Here he remained twenty-two years, laboring with great fidelity and success, and often amid exposures and privations that were almost unparalleled. In traveling to his different preaching stations and visiting his people, he was repeatedly exposed to attacks from savages. In a letter to Dr. Muhlenberg, in 1757, he states that one day not less than seven members of the congregation were brought to the church for burial, having been murdered by the Indians the evening previous.

In the year 1773, Mr. Kurtz, who by this time had gained a high standing in the church, and had received various testimonies of the good will and confidence of his brethren, was induced to remove west of the Susquehanna, and to take charge of the Lutheran congregation at York and the associated churches. Here his good influence was widely and powerfully felt for twenty years. In 1792, being past threescore and ten, Mr. Kurtz was admonished by the advancing infirmities of age to retire from active service. He accordingly resigned his charge. He died at Baltimore, Md., May 12, 1794. The Rev. Mr. Kurtz married, in 1847, Elizabeth Seidel, of New Hanover, Montgomery Co., Pa. They had twelve children,—nine sons and three daughters.

JAMES LICK.

James Lick, son of John Lick and Sarah Long, was born Aug. 25, 1796, in Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., Pa., although several of the old citizens of that town assert that he was born in the old block-house, two miles west of Fredericksburg. His grandfather, William Lick, was an emigrant from the Palatinate, Germany, settled in Montgomery County, Pa., where he resided until his death. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and upon the battle-fields of that struggle for liberty proved his courage and patriotism. The sufferings of that aged veteran at Valley Forge made a deep impression upon the young lad, James Lick, as he listened to their recital, impressions which were never effaced, and which in his old age he had transferred to the monument hereinafter described, and upon which the hero's name stands so prominent.

John Lick,¹ father of James Lick, was born at Norristown, near Valley Forge, married, at an early day, Sarah Long, and settled at Fredericksburg. James Lick's early education was such as was taught in the small towns of the interior of that day, sufficiently meagre, none can doubt. We next find him working as an organ-maker in Hanover, Pa., already exhibiting the energy and desire for adventure which distinguished his after-life. In 1819 he obtained employment in the establishment of Joseph Hiskey, a prominent piano manufacturer in Baltimore. While here he met a young man named Meyer in search of employment, and between the two was formed a friendship which lasted through life. The lad, Meyer, of 1819 was the late Conrad Meyer, of Philadelphia, a celebrated piano manufacturer, who, while accumulating fame and fortune in Pennsylvania, never ceased to rejoice over the success of his friend in other and varied fields.

In 1820, young Lick went to New York to go into business. The want of capital interfered with his success, and at the end of the year he joined an expedition to Buenos Ayres. As this country had but recently become independent, it promised a grand future. Although earnestly solicited to accompany him, his friend Meyer refused, and Lick made the journey alone. For ten years in this new country he followed his business, manufacturing pianos, and began to reap the reward of his industry. In 1832 he surprised his friends by a visit to his native State, bringing with him forty thousand dollars' worth of valuable South American skins and hides. He now visited Fredericksburg, the only time he ever returned there after his departure in 1819. He came loaded down with doubloons, which he carried in belts around his body. He drove to the town with a horse and buggy, which, on his departure, about two weeks after his arrival, he presented to his brother William. The horse died soon after; the buggy was then sold, and the proceeds, one hundred dollars, were given to John H. Lick when he attained his majority. This amount represented one-third of the capital with which John H. Lick started business. His education was paid for by one of his uncles. Mr. Lick's return to Pennsylvania gave him for a moment a desire to remain, and he even rented a house on Eighth Street, in Philadelphia, with the intention of going into business in that city. His ardent temperament could not brook the quiet life this promised. His thoughts, doubtless, reverted to the freedom and greater scope of action which the southern hemisphere afforded, and relinquishing his leased premises, he again sailed for South America. In a few months after arriving there he had settled his business in Buenos Ayres, and sailed for Chili. In 1833 his home was in Valparaiso, and he was hard at work at his old trade, in addition to engaging in new ventures. In 1837 his reckless spirit looked out toward other scenes of conquest in his line, and he selected Peru as the place of his future operations. Pursuing the even tenor of his way, he was about given up for dead, when his friend Meyer received a package from him, containing some fourteen hundred dollars in gold doubloons, and an order for the inside work or action for twelve upright pianos, which he wished forwarded to Lima, Peru.

About this time his attention was directed towards California, now coming into prominence, and after due consideration he determined to proceed to the new El Dorado to be. Influential friends endeavored to dissuade him from this step. He was assured that the United States could not hold California; that the inhabitants were a set of cut-throats, who would murder him for his money; in short, that he was very well where he was, and that it would be folly to go elsewhere. To this James Lick gave answer that he knew the character of the American government and its people, and it was not in their nature to give up a country it had once laid hold of, and as for the other reasons, he had implicit confidence in his ability to take care of himself. A new difficulty presented itself, however, the surmounting of which shows the character of the man. He had on hand a contract for a number of pianos, when his workmen suddenly left for California. To violate his word was not for a moment to be considered, his contract must be fulfilled, and he personally did the work, although it took two years of hard labor to perform it. His pianos finished, everything was converted into money at a great sacrifice, and he was possessed of thirty thousand dollars in gold doubloons. With this he sailed for California in the ship "Lady Adams," arriving at San Francisco in the latter part of 1847. In the following spring that city contained barely a thousand inhabitants. It had just emerged from its

¹ JOHN LICK, born Sept. 13, 1765, in Montgomery County, Pa., died June 13, 1831, at Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., Pa. He learned the trade of a carpenter and joiner, and was considered one of the most ingenious workers in wood in the neighborhood, to which he had removed early in life. John Lick married Sarah Long, born 1772, died 1812, at Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., Pa. Their remains lie in the old Reformed and Lutheran graveyard in Fredericksburg, on a slight eminence commanding a view of the town. Their graves are some twenty feet apart, without head-stones, each being inclosed by a plain iron railing, erected by their grandson, John H. Lick, in 1867. The following is the old family record of their children:

"James Lick, born Aug. 25, 1796, in Fredericksburg; sponsor, John Gettel [died in San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 1, 1876].

"The second child was born July 25, 1797, and died in infancy.

"John Lick, born May 24, 1798; sponsors, Christian Long and Molly Gettel.

"Catharine Lick was born Jan. 8, 1800, her godmother being Catharine Lick [died at Mannheim, Pa., April 10, 1862].

"Sarah Lick, born Aug. 27, 1802, the sponsors being Conrad Reincoehl and wife.

"Jacob Lick, born Jan. 25, 1804, baptized March 1, 1804, the sponsor being Jacob Wenber.

"Margaretta Lick was born Sept. 27, 1806, and baptized March 6th following; Margaretta Wenber officiated as godmother.

pristine condition and primitive name of Yerba Buena, and was becoming, under American rule, a valuable seaport. Rumors of the discovery of gold filled the air, and tens of thousands flocked into and flooded out the new metropolis of the Pacific. The vast majority, irrespective of class, rushed to the mines; the sagacious minority remained in the city. Among the latter was James Lick. His shrewd insight told him that a great city would arise on this peninsula; it would be the inlet and the outlet not only of the commerce of California, but eventually of the whole northern Pacific coast. The sand-hills which stretched out from the coast and the chaparral-covered eminences his prophetic vision con-

Squatters would respect these arguments, and instances are reported of their houses disappearing almost as rapidly as the tenants. The risk was great, but he accepted it, and, having planted his money in the ground, he serenely awaited the harvest. It came, and rapidly. As the city increased, in the heart were observed large, vacant, unimproved lots, apparently forsaken, but which the inquirer found belonged to James Lick. Meanwhile, he branched off in other pursuits.

In 1852 he purchased a property in San José and had erected a mill, which was probably never equaled in the world. The wood was of mahogany, and the machinery of the finest description. It cost him verted into broad streets and avenues, lined with handsome and enduring structures. He foresaw the population streaming from every quarter of the globe to this focus of attraction; the ships laden with the necessities and luxuries of life; and he took his measures accordingly. Quietly and carefully he invested his money, sowing his gold broadcast over many a piece of ground, the sellers jubilant and exultant at the price he paid them. During 1848 he pursued this course. Keeping his own counsel, as was his wont, none knew of the extent of his purchases or the amount he paid for any of them. The usual contests over titles were encountered, and frequently he was compelled to enforce his rights through the persuasive eloquence of leveled revolvers.

$200,000, and by some was regarded as a folly, but it turned out the finest flour in California, and Lick's brand commanded the market around the world. With his own hands he planted a splendid orchard of fruit-trees, which, in those early days, was itself a fortune. During all this time he did not forget his handiwork, and in 1872 he addressed a characteristic letter to his old friend, Meyer, discussing some of the peculiarities of piano-making and giving his own views as to their relative merits. The "Lick House," in San Francisco, was another of his enterprises. It covers nearly an entire block, and in the floor he displayed the knowledge which he had gathered while working at the bench. He composed it of many thousand pieces of inlaid wood, highly polished.

When the fraternity of Freemasons wished to erect a temple in San Francisco, they found the only site which would suit them belonged to James Lick, and was part of the square upon which he designed to erect the Lick House. Of course it was not for sale. However, one of the brethren frankly approached him and in a straightforward manner told him it was the only spot which suited them. The result which was ever susceptible to the emotions of sympathy for his fellow-men. In 1874 he placed his entire property in the hands of seven trustees to be devoted to public and charitable purposes. In the spring of 1875 the bequests, aggregating several millions of dollars, were changed in some respects to the "Academy of Natural Sciences" and to "The Society of California Pioneers," of which latter he was president at his decease. He bequeathed a one-hundred Vara lot, at the corner of Fourth and Market Streets, in San Francisco, and also the residue of his vast estate to be equally divided between the two societies after his various legacies had been paid. He died Oct. 1, 1876. Among his many bequests he did not forget the far-off home of his childhood and the loved ones whose dust was mingling with the soil of the old Keystone State, for on a beautiful April day in 1876 was unveiled and dedicated at his birthplace the sculptured marble, erected at his request to the memory of his devoted mother and father, loving sister, and honored grandfather. His remains lie in that beautiful, silent city of the dead, near the portals of the Golden Gate, with the roar of the waves of the mighty Pacific ever singing his requiem.

was that the ground now covered by the handsome temple, in which the Masonic brethren of the Golden City greet their fraters from abroad so cordially, was secured, and the Lick House was to that extent curtailed in its proportions. Those only who knew the man could fully appreciate the sacrifice he made in the transaction. Although reluctant to sell, he was lavish in his gifts. His great wealth did not dry up the fountain of his noble, generous heart,

REV. FELIX LIGHT.

Felix Light was the son of John Light, and grandson of John Peter Light, who emigrated to America from Switzerland, and settled on the site now occupied by Lebanon, in 1719. His dwelling stood near what is now Fourth, between Willow Street and the Lebanon Valley Railroad. His son John occupied the old homestead after his father's death. John's youngest son, Abraham, succeeded his father as the possessor of the old homestead, while Felix, the next older brother and subject of this notice, entered upon the possession of the adjoining farm east, lying between what is now Third and Front Streets and the Union Canal on the north and Locust Street on the south, comprising about one hundred and sixty acres. About half a square, a little south of east from the Pennsylvania Nut and Bolt-Works, stands, still in good condition, the old dwelling, a frame house, which he occupied during his life from the time of his marriage. He, like his ancestors, was a member of the Mennonite denomination of Christians. He became a minister of the gospel while yet comparatively a young man. His labors as such were early of an unsectarian character. His preaching was very earnest and impressive. Doctrinally he maintained the necessity of regeneration as a condition of entrance into the kingdom of heaven. His refusal to emphasize the observance of the rites which prevailed among the Mennonites as essential to salvation, contributed, no doubt, largely to his divergence from a formal fellowship with said denomination. Kindred in doctrine and the exercise of Christian charity with the United Brethren in Christ, he became early associated with this body of Christians, and was numbered among the fathers of the United Brethren Church in Pennsylvania. His influence as a minister of the gospel was greatly enhanced by his pastoral visitations. His sons and daughters having become of sufficient age to attend to the work on the farm, he spent a great deal of his time in visiting, "from house to house," all classes and denominations of people. In Rev. J. S. Kessler's biography, p. 37, occurs the following: "Mr. Kessler long remembered a visit paid by him to one of these fathers in Israel (Felix Light) residing in Lebanon, Pa. Father Light requested him to accompany him on a visiting tour through the town. He consented, and they set off together. But such visiting! The old father seemed intent on visiting every resident in the town. House after house they entered. All seemed to know Father Light. He conversed freely with the residents respecting their health and condition; but most particularly did he inquire of the state of their souls, always imparting such advice, warning, and encouragement as the nature of the case seemed to demand. In the pulpit Father Light was an eloquent, zealous reasoner, and had many seals to his ministry." He died in great peace Jan. 23, 1841, aged seventy-three years, four months, and fourteen days.

REV. JOHN LIGHT.

John Light was the oldest son of Felix Light. He was born in 1802, in Lebanon, Pa. He entered the ministry in the United Brethren Church in 1830 or thereabouts. He supplied different charges in Lebanon County as pastor, and was repeatedly chosen presiding elder of the Eastern District of the Pennsylvania Conference, of which he was a member. From the time he contemplated entering upon, and all through his ministry, he was a close student. His practice when at home was to rise, summer and winter, at four o'clock in the morning. The time between four and breakfast he would devote to the study of the Holy Scriptures. His cast of mind was introspective, analytical, and logical. His preaching was expository and argumentative. Wit and sarcasm were not left entirely unused. Following clear elucidation, the truth was often applied and enforced with an irresistible power of eloquence. In matters of church polity he was progressive and practical. In church counsels he was always influential. He departed this life while yet comparatively a young man, April 29, 1845, aged forty-two years, five months, and fifteen days.

REV. CASPER LIGHT.

Casper Light was the second son of Felix Light; was born in September, 1804, at Lebanon, Pa. He commenced to preach at the same time his brother, John, began, in 1830. His conversion to God antedated that of his brother, however. He was less argumentative in his discourses than his brother, but possessed the advantages of a remarkably retentive memory. His preaching was of an inspiring character, and generally enthused the hearers with the hopes and joys of his themes. He was very gifted in singing, knew nearly all the hymns in the book, and had a magnificent voice well trained. In person he was above six feet high, well proportioned and erect in carriage, both genial and impressive in personal appearance. He filled various charges in the county as pastor, and served several terms as presiding elder in the East Pennsylvania Conference, United Brethren in Christ. He died in August, 1857, almost fifty-three years old.

REV. JOSEPH F. LIGHT.

Joseph F. Light was the third and youngest son of Felix Light. He was born in February, 1813, at Lebanon, Pa. Like his brothers, he set out in life as a farmer. Like them he entered afterwards, though later in life, upon the ministry of the gospel. He preached about thirteen years, supplying several charges as pastor in the East Pennsylvania Conference, United Brethren Church; the remainder of his service was in the local ministry. As a preacher he excelled his brothers in pathos, while in other qualifications he came right between them, falling behind the one and exceeding the other in recitative capacity, and exceeding the one and falling behind the other in reasoning power. He had fine social qualities, and was always a great favorite among his nephews and nieces. He arrived at a higher age than either of his brothers, and died on the 22d of February, 1870, fifty-seven years and ten days old.

GEORGE LINEAWEAVER, M.D.

George Lineaweaever, son of Peter Lineaweaever and Susanna Gilbert, was born in 1799, in Londonderry township, Dauphin (now Lebanon) Co., Pa. His father removing to Lebanon, he was educated in the schools of that town and at the academy there. He studied medicine with Dr. John Mish, one of the most prominent practitioners in his day, attended one course of lectures, in 1819, at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, but graduated from Allegheny College, Pittsburgh, in 1821. Afterwards, in 1846, Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, as a token of the marked professional standing of Dr. Lineaweaver, his skill and good judgment, together with the warm interest he had manifested in the success of that institution, conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Medicine. For forty years he continued the practice of medicine, and it was large and extensive. Apart from his professional life, he was a leading man in public affairs in the town and county, and held various positions of trust. Governor David R. Porter appointed him register of wills for the county of Lebanon, in 1839, to fill a vacancy. He died at Lebanon in 1860. Dr. Lineaweaver married Sarah Toby, daughter of Capt. Simeon Toby, of Philadelphia, and they left six sons (see Lineaweaver record), four of whom studied the profession their respected father so highly honored.

REV. LUDWIG LUPP.

Ludwig Lupp was a native of Germany, where he was born Jan. 7, 1733. He came to America in early life. Having received a fair education, he taught school in what is now Dauphin and Lebanon Counties. The sections in which he was employed being destitute of a regular ministry, Mr. Lupp assisted in holding meetings for reading the Scriptures and sermons, for prayer and exhortation in private houses, and soon began to preach in a regular way. It is not known when he was admitted into regular connection with the Reformed Cötus, and received ordination. To him, however, belongs the credit of aiding by his voice and his meagre purse the organization of the Reformed Church at Harrisburg. In 1786 he was located at Lebanon as pastor there, and served that congregation up to the time of his death. In connection with that church, he preached at Blaser's Church, near Elizabethtown, now extinct, but out of which grew the present Elizabethtown Church; also at Maytown, at Manheim as early as 1785, and at Rapho in 1791. He died at Lebanon, June 28, 1798, and is buried in the Reformed Church graveyard. On his tombstone is the following:

"Hier ruhet
Ein grauer Haupt
Ludwig Lupp,

12 Jahren Prediger in Libanon;
Geboren den 7 Januar, 1733,
Gestorben den 28 Juni, 1798,
Alt 65 Jahren, 5 Monaten, 21 Tagen.

Es war mein Beruf und Amt in dieser Welt
Zu lehren was meinem Gott und Jesu wohlgefällt
Zu predigen das Evangelium rein und treu
Den Sündern rufen zur Bus' und Reu',
Nun adieu! Freunde, folget meiner Lehr und Wort
So werden wir einander wieder sehn in jener Himmelsport."

Mr. Lupp's widow survived him a considerable time, and resided in the vicinity of what is called the Moravian Church, about four miles from Elizabethtown, where she died. Although not a man of classical education, and not regularly prepared for the ministry, the Rev. Lupp was a well-read man, and untiring in his pastoral labors to promote true piety and godliness among the people intrusted to his care as a true shepherd of his flock.

GEORGE MARK.

George Mark was born February, 1794, in Lebanon County, Pa. He learned the trade of a tanner, and was engaged in that business at Jonestown until the fall of 1834, when he was elected sheriff of the county. He was prothonotary of the county from Dec. 18, 1836, to Nov. 14, 1839, and was a faithful and efficient officer. He was an agreeable companion, deservedly popular in the community, and highly respected. In the church as in civil life he repeatedly held offices of trust and honor. He died at Lebanon on the 28th of April, 1882, at the age of eighty-eight years.

COL. PHILIP MARSTELLAR.

Philip Marstellar, son of Frederick Ludwig Marstellar and his wife Barbara, was born Jan. 4, 1742, in New Providence township, Philadelphia, now Montgomery Co., Pa. His father was a native of the Duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt, where he was born Jan. 11, 1702. He married in 1728, and came with his family in 1729 to Pennsylvania, and located on the banks of the Skippack Creek, an affluent of the Perkiomen. He was one of the founders of the Trappe Lutheran Church. He died in 1753, and of him the Rev. Dr. Muhlenberg feelingly wrote in his report to Halle eulogizing his character. His youngest son, Philip, was only eleven years of age at the time of his father's death, but he was left to the care of a pious and devoted mother, and, although not wealthy, were left in good circumstances. Philip was brought up on the old homestead, received a good German and English education, and at the age of twenty-one, when his father's estate was settled up, received his patrimony and purchased a tract of land in what is now Mill Creek township, Lebanon Co., where he must have remained several years. At the outset of the Revolution, however, we find him residing in the town of Lebanon. He was of the earliest associators, and assisted in raising the troops in 1775 and 1776 for the service. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of July 15, 1776, and during that and the following year was chosen to the Assembly. He was appointed paymaster of the militia Aug. 20, 1777; the agent to superintend the purchase of flour for the French fleet, July 13, 1779, and assistant forage-master April 5, 1780. So well done was this latter service that Gen. Washington sent Maj. Marstellar a letter thanking him for the faithful and prompt performance of his duty. He removed to Virginia in 1803, not far from Alexandria, where he died about 1809. Some of his descendants reside in Fairfax and Prince William Counties. Col. Marstellar was one of the most influential men of Lebanon County during his residence within its limits. He was a faithful officer, and it is to be regretted that fuller details of the life of so deserving a man are not within reach.

DAVID B. MARSHALL, M.D.

David B. Marshall, son of Dr. John Marshall and Elizabeth Behm, was born Oct. 30, 1823, in Annville, Lebanon Co., Pa. He received an excellent education at Mount Airy Academy, and in early manhood entered the office of his father as a student of medicine, attended lectures in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in the spring of 1844. After graduation he began the practice of his profession in connection with his father at Annville, where he re-

JACOB MEILY.

Jacob Meily, a representative man of the county, was a native of Bethel township. He was a farmer, served in the French and Indian war, and at the outset of the Revolution became an officer of one of the associated companies. He was a member of the Assembly, representing the county of Dauphin from 1786 to 1793. During his official life, in 1787, he became quite prominent as one of the leaders in the movement to leave that body so as to prevent the remained three years, subsequently practicing at Reading one year, when he permanently located at Lebanon. He soon acquired an extensive and lucrative practice, and took high rank in the profession. Endowed with strong natural talent, good judgment, and strong powers of observation and application, he needed only the opportunities which a large practice gave him to enable him to prove his ability as a practitioner, and to maintain a firm hold upon the affections of the people with whom he came in contact, and among whom he labored. He died in the prime of life, of a lingering disease, on the 29th of June, 1861. Possessed of a generous nature, he was greatly esteemed and respected by all, and his loss deeply lamented in the community as that of a valuable and upright citizen. Dr. Marshall married, May 14, 1848, ratification by the Assembly of the Federal Constitution. The sergeant-at-arms was sent after the dissenting members, and Mr. Meily was forcibly brought to the bar of the House, with McCalmont, of Franklin County. The scene in that illustrious body beggars description; the latter despite all he could say or do was forced into his place. During all these scenes Meily was silent and dignified, although as positive against the course of the Assembly as the Scotch-Irish member from Franklin. He was quite potential in the subsequent political contests of the day, and was deservedly popular among all classes. His Irish neighbors admired his pluck and firm determination. Mr. Meily died near Fredericksburg, in October, 1802.

REV. JOHN PETER MILLER.

John Peter Miller, a native of Oberant Lautern, of the Electoral Palatinate, and a graduate of the University of Heidelberg, emigrated to Philadelphia in 1730. Here he made application to the Scotch Synod for clerical ordination, and was ordained in the old Presbyterian meeting-house in that city by three eminent preachers,—Tennant, Andrews, and Boyd. Before receiving ordination a question for discussion was proposed, and in answering it showed he was a man of rare endowments. "We gave him," says Rev. Jedediah Andrews, "a question to discuss about justification, and he answered it in a whole sheet in a very notable manner. He spoke Latin as readily as we do our vernacular tongue." Shortly afterwards Mr. Miller visited Mühlbach. He preached as a Lutheran minister in the Tulpehocken settlement until 1735, when a great religious revival and excitement prevailed at Heidelberg and Tulpehocken, and scores imbibed the sentiments promulgated by Conrad Beissel, the founder of the "German Seventh-Day Baptist Association" by a secession from the Dunkards. Among the converts were the distinguished Conrad Weiser and Rev. John Peter Miller, both of whom were received into this new church by baptism in May, 1735. Weiser soon forsook the society, but Miller left Mühlbach and resorted to Ephrata, where he remained until his death, Sept. 26, 1796. At Ephrata a monastic society had been formed in May, 1733, and a cloister made, the conventicle life having been established in place of the solitary one. In 1740 there were thirty-six single men in the cloister and thirty-five sisters, and at one time the society, including the members living in the neighborhood, numbered about three hundred. The title of a Father (spiritual father) was bestowed upon Beissel, whose monastic name was Friedsam, to which the brethren afterwards added Gottrich, implying together Peaceable, God-Right. Onesimus (Izard Eckerlin) was constituted prior, who was succeeded by Jaebz (John Peter Miller). The latter, on the death of Beissel, became father and head of the monastery. This society, which had its origin at Mühlbach, and culminated in great buildings, mammoth cloisters, printing-offices, big mills, and magnificent music, attracted great attention all over the land. After an existence of fifty years it began to decline, and on the death of Miller it gradually weakened in numbers and influence. The society is not now in existence. John Peter Miller translated the Declaration of Independence into seven languages, and was visited by Gen. Lee, David Rittenhouse, Count Zinzendorf, and by many noblemen of Europe.

JOHN BICKEL MISH, M.D.

John B. Mish, son of Jacob Mish and Catharine Bickel, was born Jan. 12, 1791, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated at the Harrisburg private schools and the academy, and studied medicine with Dr. Samuel Agnew, then one of the leading physicians in the State. He attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, and graduated therefrom in 1816. He began the practice of his profession at Jonestown, where he remained some four or five years. About the year 1821 he located at the town of Lebanon, where he continued the practice of medicine until the close of his life. He was prothonotary of the county in 1837, and at the same time serving as chief Burgess of the borough during the "shinplaster" era. He died on the 15th of December, 1837, aged almost forty-seven years. As a physician, he devoted his life to the work, and was exceedingly humane and philanthropic in his profession. He was popular in the community, and his sudden death was a severe blow to the community in which he was so highly respected. Dr. Mish married, about 1816, Maria Weidman, daughter of Capt. John Weidman, of the Revolution, born May 10, 1793; died in 1866, at Lebanon.

REV. HENRY MOELLER.

Henry Moeller, the youngest son of John and Barbara Moeller, was born in 1749 in Hamburg, Germany. His father emigrated to America in 1752, locating in then Lebanon township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and having received a classical education in the University of Göttingen. The son had a good instructor. Henry was brought to the notice of the Rev. Dr. Muhlenberg, who secured him the appointment as assistant in a school in which he was himself at that time giving instruction, in the mean time devoting all his leisure to the study of theology under the direction of his patron. In the year 1774 he was licensed to preach by the Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania. Mr. Moeller's first regular pastoral charge was at Reading, where he remained from August, 1775, to August, 1777, when he removed to Philadelphia. Having consecrated himself to the work of the ministry, he evinced much of a self-denying spirit in preaching the gospel to the poor, and laboring to collect and build up congregations in the most obscure places, and under the most unfavorable circumstances. He served for some time as chaplain to an associated battalion in the war of the Revolution. Mr. Moeller about 1783 became the settled pastor of the church at Albany, N. Y., and it was under his ministry that the first Lutheran Church edifice in that city was built. In 1789 he received and accepted a call to New Holland, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he continued very laboriously engaged until 1795, when he took charge of the Lutheran interests in Harrisburg and the neighborhood. He was the first pastor after the separation of the Lutheran from the Reformed congregation. Here he remained seven years, and although his duties were laborious, his ministry was a successful one. In the year 1802, much to the regret of the congregation, he relinquished this charge, returned to his former field of work in the State of New York, where he continued about six years (the period he usually allowed himself for continuance in one place), when he accepted a call to the united churches of Sharon and New Rhinebeck, Schoharie Co., N. Y., where he officiated until physical infirmity rendered him incapable of attending to his pastoral duties. He died at Sharon on the 16th of September, 1829, in the eightieth year of his age. Mr. Moeller in person was rather thick-set, somewhat below the medium height, and very agreeable in manners and appearance. As a preacher, he was not brilliant, but instructive and practical, while in the more private duties of the pastoral office was eminently felicitous and faithful. He was a bright example of the Christian spirit, and an eminently devoted minister. The Rev. Mr. Moeller was twice married. He married first, on Sept. 19, 1775, Esther Ott, sister of John Nicholas Ott. She probably died at Harrisburg. He married secondly the widow of Baron Zedwitz, who lost his life in the French war. This latter connection proved every way a happy one, for his wife was a woman of sweet manners and amiable disposition. She died in 1827. We have no knowledge if they left any descendants.

COL. ADAM ORTH.

Adam Orth, the eldest son of Balthasar Orth, was born about 1718, in the Palatinate, Germany. He came with his parents to America in 1725, and was brought up amid the dangers and struggles of Pennsylvania pioneer life. He received the limited education of the "back settlements," and yet by self-culture and reading became a man well informed and of more than ordinary intelligence. During the French and Indian war he commanded the Lebanon township company, in Rev. John Elder's ranging battalion. In 1769 he was one of the commissioners of the county of Lancaster. During the Revolution he was early identified with the movement, and although well advanced in years, assisted in the organization of the associated battalions, and was appointed sub-lieutenant of the county March 12, 1777. Upon the formation of the county of Dauphin he served as a representative in the General Assembly in 1789 and 1790. He was opposed to the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and took an active part in the Harrisburg Conference of 1788. For a long period he operated and owned New Market Forge, which at his death he bequeathed to his son, Henry. He died at Lebanon, the 15th of November, 1794. One of the pioneers in the manufacture of iron in Lebanon County, a man of energy and indomitable perseverance, we are glad to preserve this record of him and his services. Col. Orth married, May 24, 1757, Anna Catharine Kucher, daughter of Peter Kucher, of Lebanon. Born in 1719, she died Sept. 17, 1794, and with her husband, buried in Hebron Church graveyard, of which they were earnest members. (See Orth record.)

HON. WILLIAM RANK.

William Rank, son of John Peter Rank and his wife, Eva Christine Mosher, was born Oct. 19, 1795, in Jonestown, then a part of Dauphin County, where his childhood, until his tenth year, was spent. Myerstown then became his home, where he engaged as a clerk with Governor Andrew Schulze until eighteen years of age. Returning to Jonestown, he managed successfully a store established by his father in that place, until a favorable opening attracted him to Berks County, where he embarked in mercantile pursuits.

Mr. Rank was, on the 26th of December, 1819, married to Miss Eve K., daughter of Henry and Barbara (Kern) Brunner, to whom were born children Wilhelmina, Pamela, Angelina M., Margaret, Cyrus P., William H., Erastus P., Titus H., and two who died in infancy. With the exception of the latter, the family circle remains unbroken by death.

Mr. Rank subsequently removed from Berks County, and his native village offering stronger attractions induced his return again to Jonestown, where he became both merchant and landlord, having occupied the site which is now the property of his son, Titus H., who is for the second term chief burgess of the borough of Jonestown. In March, 1844, he purchased the farm, now the residence of his son, Erastus P., and engaged in farming occupations. He also at this time followed the profession of a surveyor, which had previously engaged his attention. His patriotism was exemplified in the raising of a company of volunteers for the war of 1812, though the close of the conflict rendered their services unnecessary.

The early political affiliations of Mr. Rank were Democratic, though events during the year 1858 led him to transfer his allegiance to the Whig and later to the Republican party. He was an early justice of the peace, and for many years deputy surveyor of the county. During his residence in Lebanon, from 1856 until 1858, he was one of the councilmen of the borough. For a period of thirty-two years he was associate judge of the County Court, and at the time of his death the eldest associate judge in the commonwealth.

As early as 1816, Mr. Rank was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue for the Tenth District of Pennsylvania, and offices of minor importance were constantly tendered him, such was his popularity and integrity of character. He became a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons in 1819, and at his death was the oldest Mason in the State.

Mr. and Mrs. Rank celebrated their golden wedding in 1869, on which occasion were present sixty-two children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. The death of Mrs. Rank occurred June 24, 1877, in her seventy-eighth year, and that of Judge Rank July 7, 1881, in his eighty-sixth year. Both in public life and the more intimate relations of the home circle his death was regarded as a personal bereavement, and called forth from all classes many expressions of affectionate regard.

JOHN A. REIDENAUER, M.D.

John Andrew Reidenauer, son of Dr. Samuel B. Reidenauer, was born Feb. 7, 1825, at Lebanon, Pa. He was educated at the Lebanon Academy, and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, where he graduated with distinction. He at once commenced the study of medicine, and entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in March, 1846. In July, 1847, he went to England, where he remained two years, chiefly in the hospitals of London, and accumulated a vast fund of information. On his return home he commenced the practice of his profession at Lebanon, devoting himself zealously to his work, but his life was short. Dr. Reidenauer died on the 16th of October, 1850, at Lebanon, in his twenty-sixth year.

CAPT. JOHN REILY.

John Reily was born at Leeds, England, on the 12th of April, 1752. His father, Benjamin Reily, emigrated soon after, and was a gentleman of some note in the Province of Pennsylvania. Receiving a classical education, the former began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar on the eve of the Revolution. Accepting a commission as captain in the Twelfth Regiment of the Pennsylvania Line, subsequently (1778) transferred to the Third Regiment, he served with valor and distinction, and was severely wounded at Bonhantown, N. J., being shot through the body.¹ Returning home he slowly recovered,

"STERLING, Major General."

"I do hereby certify that Captain Reily, of the Third Pennsylvania Regiment, received a wound in his Body in the month of April, 1777, at Bonhantown, New Jersey, which frequently breaks out afresh, and proves often very troublesome; this together with other infirmities render him incapable of doing field duty. Given under my hand at Tappan, this 11th day of August, 1780.

"JOHN COCHRAN,
"Surg'n Gen'l to ye Army."

"LOUISBURG, Feb. 23, 1787.

"Sir,—Mr. Reily was disbanded on the 24th of June, 1783. The allowance now intended by the Court should commence the 25th of June, 1783. I am yours, &c., when he resumed the practice of his profession. He was present and took part in the first term of the Dauphin County Court, in May, 1785. In 1795 he published at Harrisburg "A Compendium for Pennsylvania Justices of the Peace," the first work of that character printed in America. Capt. Reily died at Myerstown, May 2, 1810. He married at Lancaster on May 20, 1778, by Rev. Thomas Barton, of the Episcopal Church, Elizabeth Myer, the daughter of the founder of Myerstown, Lebanon Co., born April 2, 1755; died April 2, 1800. They had a large family. Dr. Luther Reily, so well known to our older citizens, was their son. Capt. Reily was not a brilliant orator, but was perfectly reliable as a lawyer, and had an extensive practice at the Lancaster, Berks, and Dauphin courts. He was a tall, courtly gentleman, and an ardent Whig of the Revolutionary era. He was a polished writer, and a manuscript book of literary excerpts in the possession of his descendants shows a refined and cultivated taste.

SAMUEL REINOEHL.

Samuel Reinoehl, son of George Henry Reinoehl, was born Jan. 17, 1805, at Lebanon, Pa. The ancestor of the family, George Henry Reinoehl, emigrated with his wife, a Swabian, from Württemberg, Germany, arriving at Philadelphia November 9, 1749, on the ship "Good Intent." He was a French Huguenot, having fled from France upon the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He settled in Lebanon township, then Lancaster County, becoming a naturalized subject of Great Britain in 1761. He had four sons,—Henry, John George, Conrad, and Christopher, the eldest being born in Germany. John George Reinoehl, the second son, was born July 10, 1752, in Lebanon, where he died Oct. 19, 1832, leaving the following sons,—George Henry, Michael Henry, John, Christopher, Tobias, Philip, and Jacob. He owned nearly all the town-lots in the southern portion of the present borough of Lebanon, which were divided at his death among his children, some of whom emigrated to the West. Those remaining were George Henry, Jacob, Tobias, and Christopher. George Henry Reinoehl, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born Nov. 11, 1775, and died May 10, 1852. He was a blacksmith by trade, and followed that occupation a number of years, subsequently engaging in farming in Lebanon township. He was a prominent man in his day, active and zealous in school and church affairs. His children were Samuel; George, residing in Minnesota; Helena, married John Marquart; and Mary, married John Yorty.

Samuel Reinoehl, the subject of our sketch, was an energetic and influential citizen. He engaged in farming until 1827, at which time he established the first lumber- and coal-yard in the Lebanon Valley, drawing his material in wagons from Middletown. Besides the lumber and coal trade, he dealt largely in grain, and kept a store in North Lebanon for eight years. He was an earnest advocate of the common-school system, and the early schools of Lebanon were greatly indebted to him for their efficiency and success. He was in the aggregate a substantial, earnest, and useful citizen. He died at Lebanon on the 8th of February, 1866, aged fifty-one years. Mr. Reinehl married Uhler, daughter of Michael Uhler, of Lebanon. Their children who attained mature age were Helena, married George Gingrich; Adolphus (see biographical sketch); Tobias, one of the editors and proprietors of the Lebanon Courier; George H., of the hardware firm of George Krause & Co., Lebanon; Kate, widow of John Good, Esq., of Lebanon; John, of the dry-goods firm of Henry & Reinehl; Mary, married John Rodearmel, of Lebanon; Rose, married Edward W. Stoner, of Lebanon; Samuel Uhler, and Michael W.

DR. GEORGE ROSS.

Dr. George Ross was born in Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., Pa., Nov. 22, 1821. His grandfather, Dr. Joseph Ross, was a native of Montgomery County, Pa., and married Miss Mary Maria McClintock, of Pottstown. After his marriage he removed to Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., where, on Nov. 8, 1792, his son, Robert May Ross, was born. Shortly after the birth of Robert May, his mother died, when Dr. Joseph Ross removed to Elizabethtown. His son, Robert, was sent to Montgomery County among his mother's relatives, where he was raised and educated. When grown to manhood he returned to Elizabethtown, and about the year 1815 married Barbara Redecker, a daughter of George Redecker. They had six children, of whom George was the third, and the eldest son. His ancestors on his father's side were of Quaker origin, his mother's of Swiss descent, and were known as Pennsylvania Germans. His father engaged in mercantile pursuits, and at an early age, between school-hours, young George assisted him. At the age of ten he was sent to a select school at Reading, taught by a Mr. Ryan, from thence to Litz, where, under the care of John Beck, he made rapid progress. After two years spent in Litz he returned home, and for several years resided alternately with his grandfather, George Redecker, whom he assisted on the farm, and his father, who at times required his assistance in his business. On the 9th of May, 1838, he entered the store of Dr. Isaac Bauman, in Lancaster, as a druggist's apprentice, where he remained five months, until Dr. Bauman closed his business, when he secured a position in the store of John Wyeth, in Harrisburg. When quite a small boy he took great interest in the study of botany, a science which he pursued with great delight throughout life, and this fact becoming known to Col. John Roberts, a botanist of some reputation, a warm friendship sprang up between them, and young Ross was encouraged and assisted in his studies. At the same time he began the study of Latin with the Rev. Charles Augustus Wyeth, then teacher of a select school in Harrisburg. At the close of his apprenticeship he was offered special inducements by his uncle, Abraham Redecker, who had purchased a drug-store in Elizabethtown, which he accepted, and returned to his native place in December, 1842.

After several years he purchased the store from his uncle and engaged in business for himself. He shortly after began the study of medicine with Dr. Nathaniel Watson, of Donegal, a physician who enjoyed an extensive reputation, and after four years of close study attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, graduating therefrom in the spring of 1849. He immediately began the practice of medicine in Elizabethtown, continuing at the same time the drug business, and soon acquired a large practice. In the spring of 1852 he purchased a property in Lebanon, to which place he removed in October following. He quit the practice of medicine and devoted his entire time to the drug trade, and soon succeeded in building up a large and successful business. Dr. Ross took an active interest in the development of the town, and was associated in various enterprises which tended to promote its growth. He was one of the original stockholders and directors of the Lebanon Gas Company, and at his death president of the board of directors; many years a director of the Valley National Bank; in 1879 elected president of the Lebanon Dime Savings-Bank; was a director of the Lebanon Cemetery Association; a director of the Lebanon Mutual Insurance Company of Jonestown; and president of the Board of Health of Lebanon. He was one of the original owners of the Lebanon Paper Company, which at one time was one of the leading industries of the town. Having in the year 1842 united with the Church of God, a body of Christians organized under the labors of the Rev. John Winebrenner, of Harrisburg, he became conspicuous for his disinterested labors and great liberality, which at times amounted almost to prodigality. In 1857 the general eldership elected him a member of the Board of Publication, and he was re-elected at each subsequent meeting; was a member of the committee which published the "Church Hymn Book," and subsequently elected general book agent, in which capacity he issued a number of books and pamphlets, conducting the publishing interests with such judgment and business tact that what was a cumbersome debt when he assumed its management soon became a source of revenue, a large fund having been accumulated during the almost twenty years of his management. In addition to these general church interests, he was, in 1868, elected treasurer of the East Pennsylvania eldership, in which position he was continued eleven years, when increasing business cares demanding his attention obliged him to resign.

risburg as a depository for the church, to which, though engrossed with business, he gave a great deal of attention and managed successfully. He was for many years a valued contributor to the Church Advocate, the paper published by authority of the church, and his writings, usually accorded a conspicuous place on the editorial page, were characterized by terse, vigorous English, and were very generally read. He was a member of the Pennsylvania Historical Society, and took a great interest in matters of local history, his last published work being a biographical sketch of the late Rev. John Winebrenner. He died Nov. 30, 1880, after a brief illness. The Lebanon Courier, in speaking of it, says, "Lebanon was shocked yesterday morning as the words went round that 'Dr. Ross is dead.' His illness had been so short that few knew he was unwell. No death in Lebanon could have caused greater surprise or profounder sorrow. . . . He was a generous man in every sense where generosity was a virtue. While giving strict attention to his private business he was ever ready to assist in promoting enterprises that might advance the public welfare, and his connection with an enterprise gave it confidence in the public mind." Dr. Ross married in March, 1852, Martha Jane Robinson, of Conewago Valley. They had five children, two daughters and three sons, two of whom, George R. and Will. R., survive.

CAPT. HENRY SHAEFFER.

Henry Shaeffer, son of Alexander Shaeffer and Anna Engle,¹ was born about 1738 in Heidelberg township, Lancaster (now Lebanon) Co., Pa. The record given us has the date of his birth 1749, but this is a mistake, for he was of age in 1759. He was brought up as a farmer, and became quite prominent at the period of the Revolution. On the 26th of March, 1776, he was commissioned captain in the Second Battalion of Lancaster County Associates, and was in active service during the campaign of that year. He appears to have been a justice of the peace in 1777, appointed by the Assembly, and administered the oath of allegiance to about four hundred persons in 1777 and 1778. He was in commission as one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas for the county of Dauphin at the period of its erection in 1785, subsequently being appointed one of the associate judges of the county under the Constitution of 1790, continuing in office until his death, Oct. 12, 1803. Of him the Harrisburg Morgenrothe said, "Ein alter Einwohner und Friedensrichter daselbst." Capt. Shaeffer was a man of fine presence, of large influence, and took a prominent part in all public affairs. His wife, Anna Eva Schweitzer, of Lancaster, born Dec. 11, 1764, died April 30, 1851. They are both buried in the Reformed Church graveyard at Shaefferstown.

COL. VALENTINE SHOUFFLER.

Valentine Shouffler, eldest son of John George Shouffler and Francisca Bendel, was born in Bethel township, Lancaster (now Lebanon) Co., Pa., April 7, 1752. His parents came from Switzerland. The son received the limited education afforded in pioneer times, and was brought up as a farmer. He volunteered in one of the first companies at the outset of the Revolution, as sergeant, was taken prisoner, but managed to escape. He was subsequently a captain in the Flying Camp, and wounded in the skirmish at Chestnut Hill in December, 1778. He served at Trenton, Brandywine, and Germantown, and came out of the Revolution with the rank of major of the Associated Battalion. In the interval of peace which followed, he was a colonel of volunteer militia. Col. Shouffler represented the county of Dauphin in the Legislature from 1794 to 1796. He died at his residence at Jonestown, on the 7th of August, 1845, aged ninety-three years. He was a gallant soldier, a faithful official, and a highly-esteemed citizen. His life was a long and honorable one, and he was the last surviving soldier of the war for independence in Lebanon County. Col. Shouffler married Catharine Heyl, and their children were,—

- i. Eva, married Philip Gender; removed to Perry County, Pa., and left descendants.
- ii. Catharine, married Henry Coover, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., and had George B., who married Catharine Bishop.
- iii. Mary, married John Kessler; removed to Greensburg, Westmoreland Co., Pa.
- iv. Elizabeth, married Michael Kohr.

The children of Elizabeth Shouffler and Michael Kohr were,—

- i. Mary, married Philip Weaver, of Mechanicsburg.
- ii. Michael V., married Maria Sheaffer, of Jonestown.
- iii. Elizabeth, married Joseph Leutz, of Jonestown.
- iv. Sarah M., resides at Lebanon.

REV. JEREMIAH SHINDEL.

Jeremiah Shindel, son of John Peter Shindel and Susanna McCullough, was born May 15, 1807, at Lebanon, Pa. When about five years of age the family moved to Sunbury, where he spent his childhood and boyhood. In choosing a vocation for life he determined upon printing, and went to Harrisburg for the purpose of learning this art. In his apprenticeship he had as his fellow-workmen the Hons. Simon Cameron and William and John Bigler. This occurred when about seventeen years of age. At this time already his mind was exercised upon the subject of the ministry, and before he was through with his apprenticeship, we find him commencing theology under the Rev. George Lochman, D.D., then pastor of the Lutheran Church at Harrisburg. Upon the conclusion of his apprenticeship he returned home and completed his theological studies under the supervision of his father. In 1830 he was licensed to preach the gospel, and in 1831 ordained to the holy ministry in the Lutheran Church, the Rev. Dr. Demme and his father officiating. His first charge was in (then) Columbia County, and consisted of the Mifflinsburg, Bloomsburg, Berwick, Danville, Catawissa, Roaring Creek, Briar Creek, Conyngham, and Mahoning Churches. Besides these he had numerous stations at which he preached, serving them much of the time during the week. His duties in this charge often required rides of twenty miles to fill his appointments, required the crossing of the Nescopoc Mountain when wolves were yet prowling everywhere, rendering the field not only laborious but oftentimes dangerous. He served these congregations about eight years.

¹ In the old graveyard at Shaefferstown is an old tombstone, time-worn and time-eaten, with the following almost illegible inscription:

In 1838 he removed to Lehigh County, taking charge of the Jordan, Heidelberg, Union, Weisenburg, Zeigel's, Lowhill, and Macungie Churches. These constituted his regular charge, which he served until 1860. During these twenty-two years he also served at different times and for longer or shorter periods, the Trexlertown, Millerstown, Long Swamp, and Fogelsville Churches. In addition to this labor he organized the Morgenland, Cedar Creek, South Whitehall, and Catasauqua Churches.

The year 1859 saw him elected to the State Senate from the district composed of Lehigh and Northampton Counties, in which capacity he served for three years.

In the spring of 1862 he accepted the position of chaplain in the One Hundred and Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, serving for two years under Gens. Shields and Banks during campaigns in the Shenandoah Valley, the second battle of Bull Run, and Antietam.

He returned home in 1864 and accepted a call to congregations in Lyken's Valley, preaching his introductory sermon on New Year's Day, 1865. The regular charge consisted of St. John's, Elizabethville, Miller's, Fetterhoff's, Hoover's, and Christ Churches in Dauphin County, and Stone Valley Church in Northumberland County. Besides these he served, principally on week and festival days, the Gratz Church in Dauphin County, and the Vera Cruz Church in Northumberland County. A part of his charge was served by his father for twenty-eight years. Here he labored until the 17th of March, 1870. About this time his mother died at Sunbury, and whilst there attending her funeral he was attacked with asthma. After a few weeks' confinement he was able to return to his home at Allentown, but never recovered. He died there on the 2d of July, 1870, at the age of sixty-three. The Rev. Shindel married in April, 1828, Elizabeth A. Masser, of Sunbury.

JOHN ANDREW SHULZE.

John Andrew Shulze, the son of — Shulze, was born July 19, 1775, in Tulpehocken township, Berks Co., Pa. His father was a clergyman of the German Lutheran Church, and had several congregations to which he ministered. The son received his early instruction in English and German from his father. He was afterwards put to an institution in Lancaster, and while there was under the immediate care of his uncle, Dr. Henry Muhlenberg. He completed his preparation for college in York County, under the instruction of the Rev. Mr. Melsheimer.

He received a finished classical education in the city of New York, and afterwards studied theology there with his uncle, Dr. Kunze, a celebrated divine of that day. In 1796 he was admitted as a member of the German Lutheran Synod, and was shortly afterwards ordained a minister in that church. For a period of six years he officiated as pastor of several congregations in Berks County, and was esteemed and loved by all who knew him.

In 1802 a rheumatic affection from which he had long suffered obliged him to suspend his labors in the ministry, and two years later, finding no improvement in his condition, he was induced to seek other occupation. He accordingly entered upon mercantile business in the village of Myerstown, then Dauphin County, in which he continued for several years, accumulating a small fortune.

In 1806 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, and was re-elected for the two succeeding years. He was urged by his constituents to accept a nomination for a fourth term, but declined. The journals show that during the period in which he was in the House there was no more active or efficient member than Mr. Shulze, or one whose votes will better stand the test of minute scrutiny. He was a consistent Republican throughout, manifesting an ardent attachment to the Constitution and the principles which he had received from a pious and patriotic father, and which characterized the whole course of his life.

His business qualifications and his probity attracted the attention of Governor Snyder, who, in 1813, appointed him Surveyor-General of the State. This office, at that time an important and responsible one, he declined. Governor Snyder then tendered him the positions of register, recorder, prothonotary, clerk of the Orphans' Court, and clerk in the Sessions Court of Lebanon County, which he accepted. In the discharge of the duties of this office he continued until the expiration of Governor Snyder's term, when he was recommissioned under the appointment of Governor Findlay. In the early part of 1821, though warmly solicited by large numbers of the citizens to remain in this position, he resigned, and was in October of that year elected to represent Lebanon County in the House of Representatives. In the following year he was chosen a State senator for Dauphin and Lebanon Counties, carrying the district by a large majority, though opposed by a well-organized party.

Before he had been a year in the Senate he was selected as a candidate for Governor by the Republican party, and was elected by a majority of over twenty-five thousand. He was nominated for a second term in 1826, and was elected with a unanimity unparalleled in the history of the government, receiving over seventy-two thousand votes, while his opponent, John Sergeant, got but about one thousand. He had immense patronage to bestow, having in addition to that originally given by the Constitution, now grown to enormous proportions, that recently created by the legislation for the public works. In commenting upon this feature of his administration a recent political writer says, "This power was exercised with great prudence and good judgment. It might indeed be said that Governor Shulze called the best sense of the State around him. His officers everywhere were capable and honest."

This was an era when stupendous plans for the improvement of the commonwealth were adopted and put in execution. Questioning the propriety of the State assuming to execute the functions of a corporation in opening avenues of traffic, he opposed the loan of a million of dollars which was authorized by the Legislature, but was obliged to yield to the will of the people, and before the close of his second term six millions had been borrowed.

It was soon after his first election, in 1823, that the old parties were broken up, none after that time calling themselves Federalists. Indeed, the term Federalist became odious; but from its ashes there sprang a party which became more powerful than any which before or since has borne sway in this country. Every Federal newspaper in Pennsylvania except three—the United States Gazette, of Philadelphia, the Village Record, of West Chester, and the Pittsburgh Gazette—joined in its support. In the national election of 1824, parties being in a disorganized state, there was no choice for President by the people, Crawford, Adams, Clay, Calhoun, and Jackson being supported. John Quincy Adams was elected by the House of Representatives; but in 1828 Jackson was chosen, receiving a majority of fifty thousand in Pennsylvania, his brilliant victory at New Orleans, gained with scarcely a casualty on our side, creating immense enthusiasm among the people in his favor. In 1824 the nation's early friend and benefactor, Gen. Lafayette, revisited the scenes of his former trials and final triumphs. Governor Shulze had the satisfaction of welcoming the hero to the soil of Pennsylvania, which he did at Morrisville in a brief but eloquent and impressive speech.

In his annual message to the Legislature, immediately succeeding the election of President Jackson, Governor Shulze expressed his views of the duties of the citizen in acquiescing in the will of the majority, and of giving the successful candidate a cordial support, in a manner worthy of the most thoughtful consideration. He says, "In the organization of our government of the Union and of the State, the simple and efficient principle which secures our welfare and repose is that the will of the majority shall rule, and whenever that will is constitutionally expressed, whether it be by election or by legislation, it is the plain duty, as it must always be the pleasure, to every public functionary cheerfully to concur. To him the laws are the laws of the people, and to him the magistrate is the magistrate of the people, by them rightfully invested with authority for their benefit, and intrusted with so much power as the constitution confers upon the office. At seasons of elections, especially for the higher stations, there will often be great excitement, proportioned to the interest produced by the occasion, and indicative of the solicitude naturally felt in the delegation of important public trusts. It is the right of the citizen freely and actively to take his post according to the dictates of his judgment. The election over and its result known, he who has the majority is entitled to be honored and respected as the people's choice, and to be supported in his efforts faithfully to fulfill and discharge his duties. Such a season has just passed, and furnished a new evidence of the stability and excellence of our form of government. If in its progress there has been more than usual warmth, it is now at an end. The question which caused it is decided. Every good citizen will acquiesce in the decision, and every public functionary, governed by the same motive which influenced him to abstain from embarking his official character in the contest while it is going on, will find himself placed in no new position, but maintaining the relation to the high officer elected which the constitution creates, and ready within his allotted sphere cordially to co-operate with him for the common good."

None of the predecessors of Governor Shulze had come to that high office with so much scholastic culture and grace as he. He truly appreciated the value of education, and as he looked over the broad face of the commonwealth and saw a vast and rapidly increasing population without adequate means of school instruction, his heart was moved and his sympathies were aroused in their behalf. He knew the will of the founder in this regard; he knew the provisions of the organic law, and he was unwilling to rest satisfied so long as the intentions of the founders remained unfulfilled. His messages are replete with the most urgent appeals for some legislation which would secure the privileges of elementary education to all. In that of 1827 he says, "Among the injunctions of the constitution there is none more interesting than that which enjoins it as a duty on the Legislature to provide for the education of the poor throughout the commonwealth. Whether we regard it in its probable influence upon the stability of our free republican governments, or as it may contribute to social and individual happiness, it equally deserves the earnest and unremitting attention of those who are honored with the high trust of providing for the public welfare. If the culture of the understanding and the heart be entirely neglected in early life, there is great reason to fear that evil propensities will take root, while with proper discipline there might have been a rich harvest of usefulness and worth. A knowledge of our rights and a sense of our duties, a just estimate of the value of the blessings we enjoy, and an habitual desire to preserve them are the wholesome fruits of that good seed which it is the object and, with the favor of Providence, the effect of moral and intellectual instruction to implant. It cannot be supplied to all in equal measure, but it is hoped that the time will come when none shall be left entirely destitute. Then will the Legislature truly be in this respect what the framers of the constitution desired it should be, a parent to the children of the poor; and they in return will have strong inducements to love and to honor and to do their utmost to perpetuate the free institutions from which they derive so signal a benefit, so prolific a source of happiness."

Again, in his message of the following year he urges upon the attention of the Legislature the importance of immediate action, and adduces new and weighty considerations to enforce his views. "The mighty works," he says, "and consequent great expenditures undertaken by the State cannot induce me to forbear again calling attention to the subject of public education. To devise means for the establishment of a fund and the adoption of a plan by which the blessings of the more necessary branches of education should be conferred on every family within our borders would be every way worthy the Legislature of Pennsylvania; an attention to this subject at this time would seem to be peculiarly demanded by the increased number of children and young persons who are employed in manufactories. It would be desirable for the employers and parents, as well as children, that this matter should early engage the attention, and be early acted upon by the Legislature, inasmuch as it will be easier in the infancy of manufactories to adopt and enforce a liberal system than it would be to establish such a system when thousands more children shall be employed than are at this time. The establishment of such principles would not only have the happiest effects in cultivating the minds, but invigorating the physical constitutions of the young. What nobler incentive can present itself to the mind of a republican legislator than a hope that his labor shall be rewarded by insuring to his country a race of human beings healthy and of vigorous constitutions, and of minds more generally improved than fall to the lot of any considerable portion of the human family?"

At the conclusion of his second term Governor Shulze retired from public life, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. His kindness of heart induced him always to lend a listening ear to those in trouble, and his counsel was often sought by the community among whom he dwelt. In 1839 he was elected a senatorial delegate to the National Convention which assembled at Harrisburg to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, and was chosen one of the vice-presidents on that occasion. In the following year he was a member of the Electoral College, of which he was unanimously chosen president. In 1846 he removed with his family to Lancaster, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred on the 18th of November, 1852, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

HENRY WILLIAM STEIGEL.

Henry William Steigel, or Baron Steigel, as he is generally called, was born near the city of Manheim, Germany, about the year 1733. He was descended from a wealthy and noble family, and came to America prior to 1757, while in affluent circumstances. With his means and position in life it is not readily surmised what should have induced him to emigrate to this country. He came to then Lancaster County, and purchasing from the Stedmans, who seem to have become his evil geni, one-third of a tract of seven hundred and fourteen acres of land, he laid out the town of Manheim. Here he erected a large brick house, a portion of which is yet standing, which the simplicity of the times called a castle. The brick were imported from Europe; there were Dutch tiles in the fireplaces, on which were painted scriptural representations, and a coarse kind of tapestry hung upon the walls. One room was set apart as a chapel, in which Steigel, it is stated, frequently led in divine worship. The wainscoting, the heavy cornices, the landscape-painting on the parlor walls representing scenes in falconry, show him to have been a gentleman of refinement and cultivation. The building, however, was unfortunately modernized and partly torn down. It retains little trace of its former grandeur.

Steigel established at Manheim a glass manufactory, but, whatever may have been the cause, the establishment, which at first seemed to be a success, eventually proved a failure. Six miles from Shaefferstown he purchased a furnace and named it Elizabeth. This furnace had been originally erected by John Huber, as early as 1755. The latter had inscribed thereon this legend,—

"Johann Huber der erste Deutsche mann

which in modern English reads, "John Huber is the first German man who knows how to make iron." Steigel also built a residence at Shaefferstown, and, on a hill near by, a tower. It is traditional that his approach to his furnace was heralded by the firing of cannon. At Elizabeth Furnace shot and shell were made for the Provincial army, and even guns cast, and perchance the trial of the latter was construed into a salute for the proprietor. Steigel carried on Elizabeth Furnace about eighteen years. Some of the first stoves made in the country were manufactured by him. These were "jamb-stoves." They were walled into the jamb of the kitchen fireplace, with the back projecting into the adjoining room, and were without pipe or oven. The first improvement in these stoves probably was the Franklin stove, or Pennsylvania fireplace, and then followed the ten-plate stove, of which latter the earliest made were at Colebrook Furnace, Lebanon Co. On the front of Steigel's manufacture, it is said, was this inscription,—

If this is correct, Steigel acknowledged himself to have been a baron, which he would not have done unless it was true, for he was a gentleman of undoubted veracity. Many ridiculous stories are told of his extravagance. As a matter of course, Steigel was not different from other people in this world,—he sought wealth, and he found Dead Sea fruit. We are inclined to the belief that all his pecuniary troubles arose through the Stedmans. By their persuasion he purchased innumerable tracts of land in Pennsylvania, the warrants for them were made out in the names of Steigel and Stedman; but the former invariably paid the land-office fees. From the period of the passage of the Stamp Act on toward the Revolution, business in America was in a deplorable condition, and the enterprising and energetic Steigel was not able to meet his obligations, owing to the bad faith of the Stedmans. He was thrown into prison for debt, his creditors being inexorable. However, upon proper representations being made to the General Assembly, that body, by special act of Dec. 24, 1774, liberated him, and he struggled manfully against the tidal wave of debt which was destined eventually to overwhelm him in disaster and beggary. Then, again, when the Revolution broke out, among the loyalists were the Stedmans; their property was confiscated, and poor Steigel was not only deprived of his rights, but charged with being inimical to the liberties of the colonies. He was loyal to America, and had little sympathy with Great Britain. The ruin came, and the noble, generous-hearted Steigel was overwhelmed. The court records of Dauphin County tell the sad story. Of his last days much is in obscurity. He, however, taught school at Shaefferstown, and in Berks County, at Reading Furnace, where he for some time was a clerk, and where he shortly after died. He is buried in the old Heidelberg graveyard, Berks County, by the side of his daughter, Mrs. Old, but the grave is unmarked. His children were,—

i. Barbara, born Nov. 5, 1756; married — Ashton, of Virginia; no issue.

ii. Elizabeth, married William Old.

iii. Jacob, removed to the Shenandoah, near Winchester, Va., where he married, became quite wealthy, and left an only son, Jacob.

Elizabeth Steigel and William Old had children:

i. William, married Elizabeth Nagle.

ii. Joseph, married Rebecca Ege, daughter of Judge Ege, of Charming Forge; both died at Schuylkill Forge; d. s. p.

iii. Jacob, born Dec. 25, 1777; died unmarried at St. Croix, West Indies, Sept. 20, 1802.

William Old and Elizabeth Nagle, third generation, had children:

i. Louisa, born March 1, 1799; married Thomas Mills.

ii. Caroline, born Feb. 7, 1801; married Henry Morris, of Philadelphia.

iii. Morgan, born August, 1803; died at Richmond, Ind., and left issue.

iv. Elizabeth, born 1805; married Dr. Hamilton Witman, of Reading.

v. Rebecca, born Sept. 7, 1808; married Jerome K. Boyer, of Harrisburg.

ALEXANDER STEWART.

Alexander Stewart, son of Andrew and Margaret Stewart, was born Aug. 10, 1780, at Bush Mills, County Antrim, Ireland. At the age of seventeen he came to America, and at once secured employment on the Coleman estate, where he remained a period of twenty years. In 1817 he returned to Ireland on a visit to his parents, married, and after the lapse of two years again sailed for America. He purchased a farm near Colebrook, Lebanon Co., Pa., and until his death was actively engaged in farming and other pursuits. He died in June, 1840, at the age of sixty. Those who knew him placed a high estimate upon his judgment and esteemed him for his uprightness. He was a man of integrity, of generous impulses, largely endowed with common sense, intelligence, and strong will-power. Mr. Stewart married in 1818, at Bush Mills, Ireland, his second cousin, Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of Charles Stewart and Nancy Gray, born Dec. 10, 1800. They had issue: Andrew (1), d. s. p.; Isabella, d. s. p.; Mary; Andrew (2), d. s. p.; and Charles. Mary married, first, James Simmers, of Chester Co., Pa.; second, James Sheridan, of Dublin, Ireland, and resides, a widow, with a son by her first husband. Charles, a member of the Twelfth Pennsylvania Reserves, was wounded at the battle of South Mountain, from the effects of which he shortly afterwards died.

REV. WILLIAM STOY.

William Stoy was born March 14, 1726, at Herborn, a small town on the banks of the Dille, a tributary of the Rhine, in Westphalia, Germany. He received his preparatory education in the seminary of his native place. He studied theology; was ordained by the Classis of Amsterdam, and appointed to labor in the destitute churches in America. He accompanied the Rev. Mr. Schlatter to this country in July, 1752, and soon after his arrival took charge of the Reformed congregation at Tulpehocken, where he remained as pastor three years, resigning on account of ill health. Intending to return to the Fatherland, he wrote to the Synod of Holland for permission, but prior to the granting of his request his health improved, and he concluded to remain. In 1756 he supplied the congregation at Philadelphia, and subsequently accepted a call to Lancaster, where he labored from October, 1758, to January, 1763. During his pastorate at Lancaster he preached one-fourth of his time at Pequea, now New Providence. From thence he removed to Lebanon, his ministrations, however, extending to Host Church. About 1773 he seems to have fallen into disfavor with the church body, and became a practicing physician at Lebanon, having previously gone to Leyden in order to study the science and art of medicine. He did not at first, at least, cease to preach. He carried his saddle-bags with him to his appointments. He discovered, it is said, an effectual cure for hydrophobia, which is still in use. He also prepared another medicine which received great favor, and is still popularly known as "Stoy's Drops." He was the first to introduce inoculating against the smallpox, although it was looked upon by many as a wicked attempt to thwart Providence. He was fond of hunting, and an excellent marksman. He was an active politician, and wrote on the different topics of the day for the Reading Adler, then the only German newspaper in the locality. His sympathies were on the side of freedom during the Revolution, but these seem to have been questioned at times. He was certainly of eccentric cast of character, and this in the blunt days of the pioneers was viewed too critically. He turned his attention considerably to natural science, and took an active interest in the development of the resources of the country then so new. He was an excellent linguist; most of his letters extant are written in the Latin language. He also wrote English and Dutch with considerable fluency and correctness. Mr. Stoy died at Lebanon, Sept. 14, 1801, and at his request was buried at the Host Church, where he preached occasionally up to near the time of his death. His tombstone bears the following inscription:

"Hier ruhet
Wilhelm Stoy,
Prediger und Diener des Wortes Gottes, Geboren im Nassauischen in Herborn, den 14ten März, 1726—Kam in Dieses Land 1752. Im Ehestand lebte er mit Maria Elizabeth Mausin, 44 Jahre hinterlies 9 Kinder, und starb den 14ten September 1801,
Alt 75 Jahr und 6 mo."

The Rev. Mr. Stoy married, in 1757, Maria Elizabeth, daughter of Frederick Maus, a stocking-weaver of Philadelphia. His marriage caused, at the time it was consummated, considerable feeling among his congregation, and such was their dislike that he was forced to leave. His wife, notwithstanding her humble origin, proved to be an amiable and lovable woman, and during Mr. Stoy's subsequent ministries was universally respected.

REV. CONRAD TEMPLEMAN.

Conrad Templeman was a native of Heidelberg, Germany, where he was born in 1687. He learned the trade of a tailor, and had received a good German education in his native city, and more than probable a partial university course. He emigrated to America in 1727, and located in Lebanon township, where he took up two hundred acres of land. In those pioneer times he acted as teacher, and in the absence of a minister in his neighborhood was the preacher from the period of his settlement. He must have been an indefatigable worker, and a man who, in the necessities of the times, embraced the golden opportunity of doing his duty to his countrymen, who, away from the advantages of instruction and religious worship, were ministered to by a pious layman. In 1747 the Rev. Mr. Schlatter visited the home of Templeman. He found him then to be a man of about sixty years of age, "of correct views, quiet and peaceable in his spirit, by which he has won the love and respect of the community." His ministry not being ecclesiastically regular, Mr. Schlatter presented his case to the fathers in Holland, and it was afterwards, in 1751, directed by the Synod of North Holland "that old Father Templeman be ordained." His labors extended throughout the Swatara region and into Lancaster County. He was the regular minister at the "Hill Church" at the time the old church edifice was consecrated, but how long he had been officiating in the charge before is not known. He preached also in an old church some few miles southeast of Lebanon, which has long since been demolished. It is stated that he preached at several other points in Lebanon County upwards of twenty-five or thirty years, until about 1760. Baptisms by him are recorded in the church-book at Jones-town as early as 1745. In 1760, by the Cötal minutes of the Reformed Church, Templeman was "stone blind," and "preached only seldom, and in his own house." It is known, however, that he continued to preach in the churches for some time after he was blind. The old one-story log house where Templeman lived, is, says Ezra Bucher, of Cornwall, yet standing. When Schlatter visited America in 1747, Templeman appears to have had a family, but in his last years he resided with his sister, who was wife to John George Brunner, where he died about 1761. He is buried about four miles southeast of Lebanon, on a barren hill, now known as Templeman's Hill, a short distance from his pioneer home. A God-fearing man, he was a faithful minister of the cross.

JOHN W. ULRICH.

John Weidman Ulrich, son of Rev. Daniel Ulrich and Elizabeth Weidman, was born in 1816, in Stouchsburg, Berks Co., Pa. The family emigrated from Würtemberg, Germany, and settled in Berks and Lebanon Counties. Rev. Daniel Ulrich was a clergyman of the Lutheran Church. He left four children,—Dr. Daniel A., a deceased physician, of Reading; John Weidman; William, of Emmitsburg, Md.; and Henrietta, widow of William Burns, an officer in the United States navy. John W. Ulrich was prepared for college by his father, and entered the College of New Jersey, now Princeton, from which he graduated in 1839. After leaving college he commenced the study of the law with Jacob B. Weidman, of Lebanon, and was admitted to the bar of that county in 1842. He began the practice of his profession at Lebanon, and rapidly acquired a large business. For many years he devoted himself especially to the Orphans' Court, and in the transactions therein took a leading place among his brethren of the bar. A gentleman of recognized ability, he was careful and systematic in business, reliable and painstaking in whatever was confided to him. He was thus called upon to act in the capacity of executor, administrator, or guardian very frequently, and held a fiduciary relation to a number of extensive estates. He never aspired to an office, preferring his profession and the quiet of private life. He was prominently identified with the Salem Lutheran Church at Lebanon, and was an elder thereof at his death. He died in 1864, at Lebanon. Mr. Ulrich married Mary Bowman, daughter of David Bowman, who at one time was treasurer of Lebanon County. They had one son, George Bowman Ulrich, who graduated at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass., in 1874, studied law, and was admitted to the Lebanon County bar in 1879.

JACOB B. WEIDMAN.

Jacob Barge Weidman, son of Capt. John Weidman, of the Revolution, and Catharine Mason, was born May 12, 1789, in the city of Philadelphia. He was educated at Harrisburg in the Latin school of James Ross, and graduated at Dickinson College. He afterwards read law with Samuel Laird, of Harrisburg, a noted lawyer of his day, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the August term, 1813. He at once located at Lebanon, and was admitted to the bar of the county, then just organized, at the same time with James Hopkins, Thomas Elder, George Fisher, George B. Porter, and James Buchanan, all prominent lawyers of Central Pennsylvania. Mr. Weidman continued in the successful practice of his profession upwards of forty years, and was a safe and reliable counsellor. The only office he ever held was that of a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1837-38. He died at Lebanon on the 5th of March, 1857, aged almost sixty-eight. Mr. Weidman was thrice married,—first, to Mary Murray, daughter of William Murray, of Harrisburg; secondly, Mary Eliza Morris, daughter of William and Sarah Morris, of Philadelphia; and, lastly, to Elizabeth C. Murray, of Harrisburg, and had issue by each marriage. (See Weidman record.)

CAPT. JOHN WEIDMAN.

John Weidman was born June 4, 1756, in Lancaster County, Pa. He received a good education, and was brought up to mercantile pursuits in Philadelphia. At the outset of the war for independence he became an officer in one of the associated battalions, and when Congress directed the organization of the German regiment he was commissioned an ensign, July 12, 1776; promoted first lieutenant May 14, 1777, and served in the battles of Long Island, Germantown, White Plains, Monmouth, Trenton, Princeton, and Newtown, being with Gen. Sullivan in his campaign of 1779 against the Indians in New York. He was adjutant of the regiment that year, and retired the service Jan. 1, 1781. He was a brave and gallant officer, and among the distinguished men of the German regiment, who not only acquitted themselves nobly upon many a battle-field, but bore the fatigues and privations of the dreary winter of 1777-78 at Valley Forge. At the close of the war Capt. Weidman entered mercantile life at Philadelphia, subsequently removing to the neighborhood of his birthplace in Lancaster County, where he kept a store and practiced surveying. He afterwards went to the town of Lebanon, where in 1800 he purchased the Union Forge estate in Lebanon County from Robert Coleman, which establishment he carried on many years. He was one of the associate judges of the county of Lebanon from 1821 to 1830. He died at Lebanon, June 6, 1830, and is buried there in the cemetery of Salem Lutheran Church. Capt. Weidman married at Philadelphia, May 1, 1786, Catharine Mason, of that city. They had four children. (See Weidman record.)

GEN. JOHN WEIDMAN.

John Weidman, eldest son of Jacob Barge Weidman and Mary Murray, was born Aug. 25, 1814, at Lebanon, Pa. He was educated at the Lebanon Academy, at Dickinson and Princeton Colleges. He studied medicine with Dr. John B. Mish, and graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. He, however, concluded to study law, which he pursued under the direction of his father, and was admitted to the Lebanon County bar in 1842, and began the practice of his profession at Lebanon. He was elected district attorney of the county in 1859, serving one term. In ante-war times he was a brigadier-general of the militia, and when the civil war came he entered the army as captain of Company F, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry, serving until his impaired health compelled him to resign, when he returned home, but never recovered, dying on the 23d of April, 1863. Gen. Weidman was a good lawyer, a faithful and brave officer, and a valued citizen, whose services were highly appreciated by his fellow-citizens. He married in 1838, Emma R. Grant, of New Jersey, and they had nine children. (See Weidman record.)

JACOB WEIRICK.

Jacob Weirick, the son of Christian¹ and Margaret Weirick, was born in Bethel township, Lancaster, now Lebanon County, in 1754. He received a fair English education, and was brought up as a farmer. During the Revolution he served as a non-commissioned officer in Col. Greenawalt's battalion; was taken prisoner at Long Island, but shortly after paroled. Upon the organization of the county of Dauphin he became influential in political affairs, and was elected sheriff in 1790. He was a member of the Legislature from 1795 to 1797, and from 1802 to 1806, serving a longer period than any of his successors. About 1807 he removed to Canton township, Washington Co., Pa., where he purchased a fine tract of land. In his new home he became quite prominent, and was twice elected to the House of Representatives. He died at his residence in Washington County on the 17th of September, 1822, aged sixty-eight years.

COL. PHILIP WOLFERSBERGER.

Philip Wolfersberger, son of Adam and Margaret Wolfersberger,² was born Feb. 14, 1739, in Heidelberg township, now Lebanon Co., Pa. He was brought up to the life of a farmer, receiving such education as the backwoods afforded in pioneer days. During the French and Indian war he was in active service, and was in the Pennsylvania battalion which accompanied Col. Bouquet in his march to the relief of the posts in Western Pennsylvania in the summer of 1763. When the war of the Revolution broke out he was an officer in the Associated Battalion, and afterwards lieutenant under Col. Curtis Grubb in the Flying Camp, and in the Long Island campaign of 1776. In the subsequent campaigns in and around Philadelphia he was a participant, and was an active and gallant officer. After the Revolution, when the Provisional army was organized by direction of the Congress, he rose to be a major and lieutenant-colonel of the militia battalions. He held various public offices of trust and honor. He closed his long and useful life at Campbelstown, Londonderry township, Lebanon Co., on the 14th of July, 1824, in his eighty-seventh year. His son Frederick was sheriff of Dauphin County, 1806 to 1809.

COL. JOSEPH WOOD.

Joseph Wood, son of William and Jane Wood, was born in 1721, in the north of Ireland. His father emigrated to America prior to 1740, and settled in what was afterwards East Hanover township, Lancaster Co., not far from Jonestown. The son was brought up to the life of a pioneer, and his advantages of education were exceedingly limited. We first find him as a non-commissioned officer in one of the ranging companies upon the frontiers during the early part of the French and Indian war, afterwards ensign in the Provincial Battalion under Bouquet in the expedition of 1763, distinguishing himself at the battle of Bushy Run. When the war for independence was inaugurated he was one of the prime movers in organizing the military, as all the officers who served in the Indian wars were; and when Congress, on the 9th of December, 1775, resolved to raise four battalions in Pennsylvania, the Second Pennsylvania Battalion, Col. Arthur St. Clair commanding, was formed, and of which Joseph Wood was commissioned senior captain Jan. 3, 1776. Unfortunately, the roll of his company is not to be found. He was commissioned major Jan. 18, 1776, and during the Canada campaign of that year took a prominent part. On the 2d of June the command of St. Clair, numbering six hundred men, was ordered from the Sorel to attack the enemy under Col. Maclean, who had advanced as far as Three Rivers with eight hundred British regulars and Canadians. On the 6th, Irvine's and Wayne's battalions were ordered to join St. Clair at Nicolette, where Gen. William Thompson was to take command. Unless he found the number of the enemy at Three Rivers to be such as would render an attack upon them hazardous, Gen. Thompson was directed to cross the river at the most convenient place

¹ CHRISTIAN WEIRICK, of Bethel township, died about the 1st of July, 1771, leaving a wife, Margaret, and children as follows:

- i. Mary.
- ii. Margaret.
- iii. Christian.
- iv. Jacob.
- v. George.
- vi. Peter, m. Catharine Simons.
- vii. Elizabeth.

"Margreda Wolfersperger in geboren jar 1697 den 21 Sebtemper ist gestorben den Christ mond 1775."

Another of 1777 has, all that can be deciphered,—

"Hervert Adam Wolfersperger."

he could find and attack them. Owing to an almost impenetrable swamp into which part of the force had become entangled, the expedition did not accomplish its purpose. In the mean time the British occupied their landing, and had it not been for the daring and intrepidity of Maj. Wood the enemy would have captured the boats of the Americans, he saving all except two. In July it was determined to remove the American army to Ticonderoga, and it was during this eventful period, while conducting a body of troops from Crown Point to the former place, that Maj. Wood, who had previously been promoted lieutenant-colonel, and then in command of the Second Battalion, was severely wounded in the left leg and also in the left arm. Col. St. Clair having been appointed brigadier-general by the Congress, Lieut.-Col. Wood was commissioned colonel Sept. 3, 1776, and was continued in service until December following. The Third Pennsylvania Regiment of the line was formed on the basis of the Second Battalion, recruited in December, 1776, January and February, 1777, and arranged in the Continental service March 12, 1777. Col. Wood was recommissioned as commanding, but his health was so seriously impaired by his wounds that he was compelled to resign in July of that year. He returned home, and died towards the close of the year 1789, at Jonestown. He was a gallant and intrepid officer. A son, Dr. William Wood, practiced medicine for a long period at Jonestown, and died there.

CHRISTIAN ZEHRING.

Christian Zehring, the youngest son of Ludwig Zehring, was born Oct. 5, 1755, in Bethel township, Lancaster Co., now Swatara township, Lebanon Co., Pa. His education was limited to the instruction obtained in the parochial schools, which, in those early times, were opened only during the winter months, and that mostly in German. He learned the trade of a blacksmith, and the stone shop he erected is yet standing on the farm he owned in Union township. On this farm, which was a large one, he erected two large dwelling-houses of stone, and also a large Swiss barn of the same material. Along with his blacksmithing, he and his sons farmed, and established a regular team for the conveyance of produce to Philadelphia, and the bringing merchandise for the stores in the neighborhood. This business was continued for many years. He filled the various offices of supervisor, overseer of the poor, etc., with credit. In the year 1819 he removed to Warren County, Ohio, whence several of his children had previously removed, and died there on the 5th of June, 1832. Mr. Zehring was twice married,—first, to a Miss Umberger, by whom he had three children; second, Anna Maria Rauch, born April 1, 1762, in Hanover township, Lancaster Co., Pa.; died June 22, 1839, at Germantown, Montgomery Co., Ohio, and had eleven children. (See Zehring record.)

JOHN ZEHRING.

John Zehring, son of Henry Zehring and Maria Elizabeth Rupp, was born Sept. 20, 1792, near Jonestown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He received the ordinary education afforded by the schools of the county, and was apprenticed to the trade of shoemaker. About 1813 he went to Harrisburg, and established himself in business. He was a member of Capt. Walker's company of volunteers which marched to the defense of Baltimore in 1814. For thirty years Mr. Zehring resided at Harrisburg. In addition to his store he was extensively engaged in the wood and coal business. In 1842 he disposed of his property and removed to Bureau County, Ill., where he purchased a tract of land and went largely into stock-raising. He died there on the 5th of October, 1846. Mr. Zehring married, Jan. 9, 1817, Margaret Herman, daughter of John Herman and Sarah Bright, of Dauphin County, Pa. They had a large family of children. Of the sons, William M., born Nov. 30, 1824, at Harrisburg, was educated at Dickinson College, studied law, and rose to the position of judge of the courts in Illinois; James Roberts studied medicine, and served as division surgeon during the Rebellion. (See Zehring record.)

JONATHAN ZERBE, M.D.

Jonathan Zerbe was born July 31, 1812, in Tulpehocken, Berks Co., Pa. He was the son of a farmer in moderate circumstances, and his early education was such as the schools of the vicinity afforded. He learned the trade of a shoemaker, but at the end of his apprenticeship he went to Virginia, where he attended school and gained a fair knowledge of the English language, which at that time was but little used in the section of the county where he was born. In 1837 he went to Shaefferstown, and entered the office of Dr. John Shertzer as a student of medicine. Before the completion of his studies Dr. Shertzer emigrated to Ohio, leaving his practice to his student. He attended two courses of lectures, one at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, the other at the University of Maryland, Baltimore, after which he started out fairly in the practice of his profession at Shaefferstown. In 1846 he entered the mercantile business, with Cyrus M. Krall as partner, and continued in the business until 1854. In 1870 he was elected a representative from Lebanon County to the General Assembly of the State, and served during the session of 1871. He died after a brief illness at Shaefferstown, on the 3d of April, 1877. Dr. Zerbe took a warm interest in public affairs. During the war of the Rebellion he was a zealous supporter of the government, and gave freely of his means to aid in raising and equipping troops. In his adopted home he was a promoter of all measures and enterprises that tended to the public welfare. The cause of education had in him an ardent advocate. He was one of the original incorporators and a trustee of the Shaefferstown Academy, which in its day was one of the best institutions of learning in the State; and he also later in life served as a director of the common schools of Heidelberg township. In his profession, which he practiced for almost forty years, he attained the reputation of being a safe and successful practitioner. Dr. Zerbe married, in 1840, Martha A. Myer, and they had five children. Of the sons, Charles M. is a lawyer, and Thomas T. and B. Frank, physicians, practicing at Shaefferstown.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN.

J. H. Bassler

[For the omissions in the following record we are not responsible; those to whom we applied for information are. We have endeavored to do our duty in this particular, and regret to say that in numerous instances where it would have afforded us much pleasure to preserve some brief record of the representative people now living in the county, our request was unheeded.]

CAPT. JOHN H. BASSLER.

John H. Bassler, son of Henry Bassler and Barbara Unger, was born Feb. 6, 1834. His ancestor, Henry Bassler, a native of Basel, Switzerland, emigrated to America in 1707, and settled at Rhinebeck, N. Y. From thence he removed to Schoharie, N. Y., where he remained until the immigration from that section to the Swatara region in 1723, when he came to Pennsylvania. Of his children, Simon Bassler married a Miss Illig, and their children who survived their father, who died in January, 1802, were Simon, John, Catharine, Elizabeth married Emanuel Zartman, Eve married Stephen Horning, Barbara, and Anna Maria married John School. Simon, the eldest, married Miss Hontz, of Lebanon County, and they had John, Henry, Thomas, Daniel, Michael, Catharine, Susan, Elizabeth, and Polly. Henry Bassler, of the third generation, born in 1798, and died in 1851, married Barbara Unger, of Lebanon County, and their children were Sarah, Elizabeth, Susan, J. H., Rebecca L., William B., and Amanda. John H., the subject of this sketch, received his education in the township school, and at Myerstown Academy. He then engaged in teaching, at first in the public schools, and later at the academy at Myerstown. In 1862 he raised a company for service in the civil war, and was commissioned captain of Company C, One Hundred and Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Aug. 28, 1862; was severely wounded at Gettysburg and Ralph; he married, secondly, in 1880, Amanda Mosser.

FRANKLIN H. BOWER, M.D.

Franklin H. Bower, son of Henry Bower and Susan Zimmerman, was born in April, 1838, in Myerstown, Lebanon Co., Pa. His grandfather, Capt. Jacob Bower, an extensive silk merchant of Philadelphia, on retiring from business took up his residence at Womelsdorf, Berks Co., Pa. He married Rebecca Wood, of Philadelphia, and their son, Henry Bower, F. H. Bower M.D.

July 1, 1863, and discharged through disability on the 18th of December following. Capt. Bassler re-entered the service in October, 1864, and was detailed to the command of Company I of the Tenth Veteran Reserve Corps, from which he was transferred to the command of Company B of the Twelfth Veteran Reserve Corps. In the fall of 1865 he was detailed for service in connection with the Freedman's Bureau and stationed at Lumberton, N. C., from which he resigned in the spring of 1866, and resumed his profession as instructor, having been for a year principal of the Pinegrove schools. Capt. Bassler married first, in 1859, Sarah Brobst, of Berks County, who died in 1877, and their children were Horace, Laura, Robert, born at Philadelphia, died in 1836 in Myerstown, where he resided several years; married Susan Zimmerman, daughter of John Zimmerman, of Myerstown, and had children,—William, Cyrus J., Jerome, Franklin H., Mary A., Rebecca E., and Anna M. Franklin H. was educated at Myerstown, became a drug clerk in Philadelphia, subsequently returned home and entered the office of his brother, Dr. William Bower, when he began the study of medicine, attended the lectures of Jefferson Medical College, from which he graduated in 1859. He located at Myerstown, where he has continued in the practice of his profession. Apart from these duties Dr. Bower is engaged in several business operations, exportation of quercitron bark, an iron foundry, and the management of a stock farm.

ISAAC BEAVER.

Isaac Beaver, son of Samuel Beaver (1801-1863) and Susan Grumbine (born 1807), was born in Lebanon County, and was educated in the common schools of that period. He never learned any trade, nor entered upon the study of any of the professions, but in due time became one of the enterprising merchants of Annville, a thriving town on the line of the Lebanon Valley Railroad. He was married in 1860, to Susan A. Bair, daughter of George Bair, of Annville, Pa. Their children are Abbie E., William, Rosie, Edwin, Ira, Carrie, and Mary. Mr. Beaver has so far earned the respect of his fellow-townsmen that they have honored him with the office of justice of the peace for at least two terms. His father, Samuel Beaver, was also highly esteemed for his probity of character, and was honored with the position of post-master of Annville by Gen. Zachary Taylor. The Beaver family is one of the oldest, and among the most highly respected in Lebanon County.

PROF. WILLIAM BODENHORN.

William Bodenhorn, son of John Bodenhorn, was born July 1, 1844, at Annville, Lebanon Co., Pa. His great-grandfather, John Bodenhorn, came to America from Germany about 1860, and settled upon a farm near Philadelphia, where he died. His son, John, moved to Schuylkill County, where he became quite prominent. A son of the latter, Henry Bodenhorn, worked in the mines in his youth, and at the age of seventeen removed to Swatara township, where he began farming, and married a Miss Wetzel. From the father of his wife he learned the art of weaving, and followed that business twenty-five years. A son, John, learned the trade of a tailor with John Uhler, at Annville, and for thirty-five years carried on that occupation. He was accidentally killed in a railway accident on the 13th of September, 1870. William Bodenhorn, the subject of our sketch, began to teach school in Dauphin County at the age of sixteen, and for thirteen years taught in that and Lebanon County, including a four years' term as principal of the Annville High School, and five years as tutor in Lebanon Valley College. In May, 1875, he was chosen county superintendent of public schools, and is now filling his third successive term.

WILLIAM E. BRUNNER.

William E. Brunner, son of John Brunner (1803-1863) and Margaret Seltzer (1804-1864), was born in Jonestown, Pa., May 6, 1834. He was educated in the common schools of the neighborhood and brought up to mercantile business. From January, 1860, to April, 1880, he kept a store on his own account at Campbellstown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He was married Nov. 26, 1857, to Louisa, daughter of Benjamin and Fanny Hocker, of Hockersville, Dauphin Co.; and their children were Emma M. (married to I. O. Nissley), Mary L., Annie W., Fanny S., Carrie H., Benjamin H., Miriam S., and Helen H.

GEORGE THOMAS CAPP.

George Thomas Capp, son of John Capp (1801-1864) and Sarah Seltzer (1804-1863), was born in Jonestown, Lebanon Co., Pa., Nov. 27, 1825. His educational advantages were such as the common schools of his day afforded, and a term or two at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. Soon after leaving college he engaged in the mercantile business in his native town, where he soon became one of the enterprising men of that section of country, entering into every movement that tended in the least to advance the interests or business of his town, and was the leading spirit in the building of the Boston and South Mountain Railroad, and at the temporary suspension of operations of that enterprise its treasurer. His popularity as a business man led him into the political arena, resulting in his election as chief burgess of the borough of Jonestown for three consecutive terms, and is now (1883) serving his second term as justice of the peace. In November, 1848, he married Sarah E. Bickel, daughter of Samuel E. and Maria Bickel, of Jonestown. Their children are John A., a practicing physician, George S., and Thomas H., an attorney-at-law.

WILLIAM M. DERR.

William M. Derr, son of George Derr and Catharine Fox, was born Oct. 4, 1827, at Reading, Pa. His father was a boat-builder, carpenter, and wagon-maker by trade, and for several years a contractor for the building of all the lock-gates and wood-work on the summit level of the Union Canal. He was subsequently superintendent of the canal for nearly thirty years, and remained in the employ of the Union Canal Company until 1875, when he retired from active life. He removed to Lebanon in 1827, where he continued to reside until his death, in 1880, in the eighty-first year of his age. George Derr was chief burgess of Lebanon in 1854, a trustee of Lebanon Seminary, and subsequently of Lebanon Academy. William M. Derr was educated at the Lebanon Academy, and in his eighteenth year commenced the study of law in the office of John W. Ulrich, of Lebanon, where he remained two years, when, feeling a natural bent for the study of medicine, he entered the office of Dr. Peter W. Malone, of Cornwall, attended lectures at Pennsylvania Medical College, Philadelphia, during the session of 1847-48. From that period until 1856 he assisted his father in his contract work on the Union Canal, and then removed to Hancock County, Ill., where he engaged in contracting and building on his own account. While residing in that State he renewed his legal studies, and was admitted to the Illinois bar. In 1858 he returned to Lebanon, and in April of the following year admitted to the bar of that county and at once entered into the active practice of the law. During the Rebellion he served with distinction in the army, and was captain of Company A, Ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the expiration of his term of service. Mr. Derr has been connected with several local institutions of prominence, was a director and the solicitor of the North Lebanon Savings-Bank during its existence, served as a solicitor of the Union Canal Company for a number of years, and held the same relation to several insurance companies. At the present time he is editor of the Lebanon County Independent, a paper established by him May 11, 1882, in which, being untrammelled by any entangling alliances with either individuals or parties, it is designed to treat in a just and fearless manner all questions of public interest and policy. The paper has attained a large circulation, and Mr. Derr has proven an able and forcible newspaper writer.

REV. DANIEL EBERLY.

Daniel Eberly, son of Samuel Eberly, Sr. (1790-1862), and Catharine Erb (1791-1860) was born near Shiremanstown, Pa., April 22, 1834. His preparatory studies were pursued at Mount Pleasant College, Pa.; the select course of study at Brown University, Providence, R. I., and graduated from Otterbein University, Ohio, in 1858, with the degree of A.B. On the 19th of January, 1859, he joined the Pennsylvania Annual Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, and preached on Shopp's Station three years, on Littlestown Circuit two years, and subsequently on York Springs charge, and in 1865 and 1866 in Scott Street Church, Baltimore, Md. From 1866 to 1872 he had charge of Cottage Hill College, York, Pa. During this time he was elected president of the Otterbein University, the honor and duties of which he was obliged to decline. After leaving York he had charge of a congregation in Philadelphia, and in 1874 took charge of the Trinity United Brethren Church, Lebanon, where he remained two years, when, in 1876, he was elected Professor of Latin Language and Literature in Lebanon Valley College, which position he still holds. All his time since graduation has been occupied in teaching and preaching, except a part of the year 1863, when he was in the military service of the United States. He is at present (1883) chaplain of the Eighth Regiment National Guard of Pennsylvania, his commission dating from 1875. Professor Eberly married, Aug. 23, 1870, Josephine Bittinger, daughter of William and Eliza (Hafer) Bittinger, of Abbottstown, Adams Co., Pa., and was a graduate from Cottage Hill College, at York.

JOHN J. EUSTON.

John J. Euston was born Feb. 13, 1835, in North Lebanon township, Lebanon Co., Pa. He was educated in the common schools, and raised a farmer; subsequently began clerking, and was in the railroad business for twenty years. He was elected a justice of the peace in 1857, and served in other local offices. In 1882 was elected one of the representatives of the county of Lebanon to the General Assembly of the State.

CHARLES B. FORNEY.

Charles B. Forney, son of Jacob Forney (1794-1848) and Christiana Wien (1794-1868), was born in Lancaster, Pa., July 18, 1820. He was educated in the schools of Lancaster City, and attended the closing sessions of the old Franklin College, before it was united with Marshall College. Soon after his school-days he became learned in the iron business, and at the age of seventeen years entered freely into the work, and for forty-three years was engaged in the superintendence and erection of blast-furnaces, six of which are at Lebanon,—four stacks at the Lebanon, and two stacks at the Colebrook furnaces, a recent plant with all the modern improvements. Mr. Forney was one of the Garfield electors in the campaign of 1880, and one of the representatives of the people of this State in the electoral college of that year. He was married, first, to Amelia E. Stehman, daughter of John and Ann Stehman, born in 1817, in Lancaster, Pa., and died in 1879, in Lebanon. His second wife is Rachel G. Pierie, daughter of William and Elizabeth Pierie, of Philadelphia. Mr. Forney's children are Stehman, an engineer in the United States Coast Survey; Sarah M.; Mary A., d. s. p.; Alice, d. s. p.; Debbie Coleman, d. s. p.; Charles, manager of Colebrook furnaces; and Sumter, a machinist.

JOSIAH FUNCK.

Josiah Funck was born, Dec. 25, 1825, in Lebanon County, Pa. He received an academical education, studied law, and was admitted to the Lebanon County bar, April 7, 1851. He was elected district attorney for the county in 1854, and during the Rebellion was captain of Company H, emergency troops, 1863, Forty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania militia. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1873, and served on several important committees in that body. He is engaged in the practice of his profession at Lebanon.

GEN. JOHN P. S. GOBIN.

John P. S. Gobin, named for his grandfather, John Peter Shindel, son of Samuel S. Gobin and Susan Shindel, was born Jan. 26, 1837, in Sunbury, Northumberland Co., Pa. His great-grandfather, Charles Gobin, was a captain in a battalion of Berks County associators, and served in the Jersey campaign in the war of the Revolution in the summer of 1780, and was on the frontiers in command of a company of militia to protect the settlers from the threatened invasion of the Indians, Tories, and British from New York. His grandfather, Edward Gobin, was a soldier of the war of 1812-14. John P. S. Gobin received an academical education in the schools of Sunbury; learned the art of printing in the office of the American; afterwards studying law with M. L. Shindel and Gen. J. Kay Clement. He was admitted to Northumberland County bar in 1858, and has continued in practice since, except during the period of his service in the rebellion. He entered the army at the first call for three months' men, April 19, 1861, as first lieutenant of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. After the expiration of his term he recruited a company, and on the 2d of September, 1861, was mustered in as captain of Company C, Forty-seventh Regiment. He was successively promoted to major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel of the regiment, and brevetted brigadier-general of volunteers for meritorious services March 13, 1865, and complimented in general orders for gallantry at the battle of Pocotaligo, S. C. Beside the latter action, he participated in those of St. John's Bluff, Sabine Cross-Roads, Pleasant Hill, and Cane River Crossing, serving in the departments of the South, the Gulf, and in the Shenandoah. In the latter department he was with Sheridan in his celebrated campaign, a portion of the time commanding a brigade in the Nineteenth Corps, participating in the battles of Opequan and Fisher's Hill, and particularly distinguishing himself at Cedar Creek. His command was here the right of Sheridan's line, and when a portion gave way from the severe pressure of the rebel front, which overlapped the Union, he held fast and gave the enemy his first repulse, the turning-point in the battle. He was part of the time judge-advocate-general of the Department of the South. Remained with his regiment at Charleston, S. C., in command of the First Sub-district, and acted as provost-judge of the city until January, 1866, being mustered out the 9th of that month. He located at Lebanon immediately after, resuming the practice of his profession, where he has since resided. On the 4th of August, 1874, Gen. Gobin was commissioned colonel of the Eighth Regiment National Guard of Pennsylvania, which position he now holds, the regiment being the highest rated in the State. He has filled the position of Grand Commander of Knights Templar of Pennsylvania, and is at present Grand Captain-General of the Grand Encampment of the United States. He has also served as Grand Patriarch of the Grand Encampment of Odd-Fellows. Col. Gobin married, October, 1865, Annie M. Howe, of Key West, Florida.

MAJOR L. L. GREENAWALT.

Lorenzo Leonard Greenawalt, son of Josiah Greenawalt (1799-1866) and Mary Laub (1800-1880), was born Jan. 6, 1827, at Lebanon, Pa. (See Greenawalt record.) He was educated in the schools of the town and at the old Lebanon Academy. He learned tanning and leather-dressing, the former of which occupations he followed many years. He made two trips across the plains to the Pacific Coast,—one in 1852, when the undertaking was a hazardous one, the other in 1871. During the war for the Union he was captain of Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, subsequently in the Twenty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia as major. He participated in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg. The only municipal office he ever held was assistant burgess of Lebanon borough. He is now a mail agent in the government employ. Maj. Greenawalt married, in September, 1882, Annie Gorgas, of Stillwater, Minn.

GEORGE GLEIM.

George Gleim, son of Charles Gleim (1775-1843) and Mary Gorgas (1775-1853), was born at Lebanon, Lebanon Co., Pa., on the 1st of January, 1808. His father was the first sheriff of Lebanon County, and subsequently represented the county in the General Assembly. He died at Harrisburg, and is there buried. His mother was born at Ephrata, her parents being members of the community at that place. Mr. Gleim, the subject of our sketch, was educated principally in the public schools of the locality. Upon the establishment of the Lebanon Valley Bank, Jan. 1, 1832, he was elected a teller. This was the first bank in the county; it is still in existence, and is now "The Lebanon National Bank." In 1836, Mr. Gleim was chosen cashier of the bank, and remained in that position for a period of twenty years. He resides at Lebanon. Mr. Gleim was thrice married, and had a large family of children. (See Gleim record.)

ELIAS GROVE.

Elias Grove, son of John Grove and Anna Elizabeth Wenner, was born in 1825, near Fredericksburg, Bethel township, Lebanon Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of the neighborhood, and brought up to the business of milling and farming, in which he is still engaged. He is connected with the firm of Grove Brothers, and they have large farming interests near Fredericksburg, as also grist- and saw-mills. Since the year 1840 they have been in the iron business, having extensive blast-furnaces at Danville, Pa. Mr. Grove married, in 1845, Sabina Hantz, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Hantz, of Bethel township; and their children are Peter H., Jacob H., and Emma S., married A. P. Miller, of Lebanon.

JACOB W. GROVE.

Jacob W. Grove, son of John Grove and Anna Elizabeth Wenner, was born in 1816 at Grove's Mills, near Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., Pa. He received the limited education afforded by the country schools, and brought up on his father's farm. With his brothers he engaged in milling and other enterprises, and have erected extensive iron-works at Danville, Montour Co. It may not be out of place in this connection to refer to their interests in the latter direction. In 1840 the Grove brothers, then five in number, with John Peter Grove at the head, bought a furnace which had been built by a Mr. Patterson at Danville the year previous, which they operated with great success, having studied well the nature of iron and the most economical modes of its manufacture. In 1860 they added a very large furnace, with great improvements, giving them a capacity of twelve thousand tons a year of the first quality. Of the brothers Grove then engaged in the business but two remain. Nothing but indomitable energy and perseverance could have accomplished as much or built up such large and extended business enterprises. Mr. Grove married, in 1860, Paulina Hantz, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Hantz, of Bethel township.

SIMEON GUILFORD.

Simeon Guilford, son of Simeon Guilford and Ruhannah Hayden, was born May 10, 1801, at Northampton, Mass. All who bear the name of Guilford in this country trace their origin to Paul Guilford, who emigrated from England about 1650, and settled near Boston. He left one son, Paul, who had two sons, William and John, both of whom left families,—John Guilford in Worcester County, and William in Hampshire County, in the State of Massachusetts. The youngest son of William Guilford was Simeon, born in 1751, and died in 1844. He married Ruhannah Hayden, of New England ancestry, and they had five children. Simeon Guilford entered the patriot army during the Revolution at the age of nineteen, and served to the close of the war. He afterwards commenced teaching school, and followed that profession until old age compelled him to desist. He died at Pittsfield, Mass., in the ninety-fourth year of his age. The son Simeon, subject of this sketch, early in life became interested in the subject of engineering, and labored for several years in the capacity of a civil engineer on the Erie Canal in the State of New York. In 1823 he took up his residence in Lebanon County, Pa., serving as assistant engineer with Canvas White in the building of the Union Canal, and has continued to reside in Lebanon. In 1827 he was appointed principal engineer in the service of the State of Pennsylvania by the Board of Canal Commissioners. In 1830-31, in connection with a partner, he built Swatara Furnace, in Schuylkill County, and commenced the making of iron by the charcoal process, for twenty-two years engaging in successful business. In 1855 he established a furnace of a similar kind at Lebanon, and in 1856 built the Dudley Furnace at that place for the use of anthracite coal. The latter is now known as the Donaghmore Furnace, and is operated by the Coleman estate. In 1843, Mr. Guilford was the candidate of the Whig party for the office of canal commissioner, but with the State ticket was defeated. He married in May, 1830, Catharine E. Doll, niece of Judge Andrew Graff, of Lancaster, and their children were Dr. William M., of Lebanon; Dr. S. H., dentist of Philadelphia; and Robert E., a merchant of Shelbyville, Ill. Mrs. Guilford died Oct. 8, 1858, at Lebanon.

WILLIAM M. GUILFORD, M.D.

William M. Guilford, son of Simeon Guilford and Catharine E. Doll, was born Nov. 26, 1832, at Lebahe spent in the hospitals of Philadelphia, and in November of the latter year entered upon the practice of his profession at Lebanon, where he has continued to reside. For fifteen successive years he was appointed by the directors of the poor physician to the county hospital, was one of the examining surgeons for the Ninety-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers before it was mustered into service during the late war, second lieutenant of the Lebanon County cavalry company during the emergency in 1863, and subsequently examining pension surgeon for the government. He was one of the directors of the Lebanon National Bank, one of the founders and directors of non, Pa. He received a classical education at the Lebanon Academy, and at the age of sixteen commenced the study of medicine with Professor Henry Childs, of Berkshire Medical College, Pittsfield, Mass. In 1849 he attended a course of lectures in that institution, and also the lectures of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of New York City. He then returned to Lebanon, entered the office of Dr. John W. Gloninger as a student, subsequently attending two full courses of lectures in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in April, 1852. The winter of 1852-53 the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, and a director of the Lebanon Manufacturing Company. Dr. Guilford married, Nov. 12, 1856, Mary Ritchie, daughter of John Elder Ritchie and Jane Henderson, of Dauphin County, and their children were Jennie R., William M., Paul, Adeline E., and Arthur B.

GEORGE G. HEILMAN.

George G. Heilman, son of Henry Heilman (1779-1867) and Elizabeth Gingrich (1785-1864), was born in what is now North Annville township, Lebanon Co., Pa., Jan. 4, 1816. His father was born in Lancaster County, and lived over eighty-eight years without a change of residence, yet lived in Dauphin County, and died in Lebanon County. George G. was educated in the common schools, and afterwards became a miller and farmer by occupation, and has never held an office, either civil or military. He married, Feb. 5, 1849, Christina Ulrich, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Ulrich, born Jan. 30, 1819, in East Hanover township, Lebanon Co. Their children are Calvin U., married Mary McIlvaine; Elizabeth, married Cyrus Smith; Susanna, married Henry C. Snavely; and Emma Mary.

the Rebellion; was captured near Gettysburg, and released on parole at Hunterstown. Upon the reorganization of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, he was captain of Company E, Eighth Regiment, during the railroad riots of 1877. In 1867 he was elected a representative to the State Legislature on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1868. In 1872 he was elected to the State Senate from the Dauphin and Lebanon district, and in 1875 returned from the new district of Lebanon. During this period he served on the Committees of Ways and Means, Corporations, Centennial, and others of import-

Jacob Heilman

JACOB G. HEILMAN.

Jacob G. Heilman, son of Jacob Heilman and Susanna Stroh, was born May 26, 1836, in Jonestown, Lebanon Co., Pa. (See Heilman record.) He was educated in the public schools of the neighborhood, the Lebanon Academy, and the Moravian Academy at Litz, Lancaster Co. After a brief period devoted to mercantile pursuits, he began the study of law with Gen. John Weidman, of Lebanon. He subsequently returned to Jonestown, and with his brother entered mercantile life. In 1862 he became connected with the Lebanon Mutual Fire Insurance Company as secretary, and has since continued his relations with that organization. He was twice in service during ance. He has held the various township offices, and was president of the school board of Jonestown. He is a director of the Jonestown Bank, and is the present treasurer of the "Church Home for Friendless Children," under the management of the Protestant Episcopal Church, with which denomination he has been for years identified.

GEORGE HOFFMAN.

George Hoffman, son of Michael Hoffman (1785-1857) and Magdalena Tice (1788-1880), was born Jan. 2, 1809, in Lebanon township, Lebanon Co. In his earlier years he learned shoemaking, while his educational advantages were such as the common schools afforded, and that received at Willow Grove Academy, in Lebanon County, Pa. He subsequently engaged in the mercantile and transportation business, which brought him quite prominently before the public, and so much so that he was elected treasurer of Lebanon County, also was made president of the Berks and Dauphin Turnpike Company, president of the Valley National Bank, president of the Lebanon Live-Stock Insurance Company, and treasurer of a fire insurance company. On the 7th of February, 1836, he married Lucetta Immel, daughter of Leonard and Elizabeth Immel, of Jackson township, Lebanon Co. They have one son, William J.

HENRY HOUCK, A.M.

Henry Houck, son of Samuel Houck (1808-1875) and his wife Rosanna Jontz, was born March 6, 1836, in Palmyra, Lebanon Co., Pa. His early education was obtained in the public school at Palmyra, taught by Alexander Dasher, Sr., well known as a thorough teacher and a strict disciplinarian. He also attended the Annville Academy several sessions, then in charge of W. J. Burnside, A.M., and for economical reasons walked the distance, five miles, night and morning. He also attended one term at the Arcadia Institute in Orwigsburg, and afterwards, while teaching, for nearly two years took private lessons in Latin and Greek from Rev. C. A. Wedekind, and subsequently the honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Franklin and Marshall College. In the fall of 1852, at the age of sixteen years, he entered the educational field as a teacher in Londonderry township, where he taught two terms, and ever since has been identified with school work. In August, 1859, he was appointed county superintendent of Lebanon County by Hon. H. C. Hickok, State superintendent, to fill the unexpired term of Franklin Phillips (deceased), and was elected to the same office in 1860, 1863, and 1866, and resigned in 1867 to accept the position of recording clerk in the school department of the commonwealth, tendered him by Dr. J. P. Wickersham, superintendent. In June, 1869, he was promoted to the office of deputy State superintendent, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Charles R. Coburn, which position Mr. Houck has retained to the present time. In the line of his work he has filled many places of honor and trust, and being a ready and forcible speaker has delivered addresses in every county in the State, also conducted institutes in many of the counties of New Jersey. There is no one in the State in the same work who has a larger and more favorable acquaintance with teachers and the friends of education than has Mr. Houck. He was married, April 10, 1856, to Susan Margaret Bucher, daughter of Dr. Christian and Mary Bucher. Their children are Harvey Bucher, Mary Valentine, Rosa Jontz, Lizzie Hiester, Paul Winters, Alfred Rhodes, and Susan Margaret.

PROFESSOR LAWRENCE J. IBACH.

Lawrence J. Ibach, son of Gustavus Ibach, a native of Dusseldorf, Germany, was born Jan. 17, 1816, at Allentown, Pa. His father was well known in his day as a successful worker on skillets and ladles. Young Lawrence was sent to school until he was fifteen, after which he commenced to learn the trade of his father. In 1835 the family moved to their present residence at Newmanstown, Lebanon Co., Pa., where they lived until 1849, when the subject of this sketch rented a forge near Reading from a Mr. Seidle, a nephew of the then somewhat noted astronomer, Charles F. Egleman. In 1852 he returned to Newmanstown, the climate near Reading not agreeing with his health. During his stay near that city he was a frequent visitor to Mr. Egleman, and his boyish love for astronomy and mathematical problems was freshly inspired. The intercourse with Mr. Egleman proved of much benefit to the nascent astronomer, and he speaks with kindly feeling of the pleasure and instruction he derived from the many conversations he had with him on astronomical topics. At the death of Mr. Egleman, which occurred in 1860, Mr. Ibach became the purchaser of all his books, charts, and unfinished calculations. These latter, by the advice of friends, Mr. Ibach was prevailed upon to finish. In 1863 his first calculation appeared. Since that time he has calculated for various almanacs in the United States, and also for a number in Cuba, South America, and other foreign countries. At the present time he is engaged in calculating for some of the largest houses in this country. He is also regularly engaged by most of the newspapers that publish almanacs. In 1875 he translated his work in four different languages,—French, English, Spanish, and German,—thus showing that, though wrapt in his particular business, he has taken time to study other branches of learning. He believes in working at his anvil, and uses it a few hours each day. His home is a modest, unpretending two-story frame. In the rear portion of it the philosopher has his study. In this room are all the appurtenances of an astronomical student's life. On the walls are hung maps descriptive of his profession. Placed upon the low, old-fashioned table which stands in the middle of the room are several elegantly mounted globes. Lying in a rack is a large sectional telescope, while around the room numbers of small ones are seen. In the corners of the apartment are great stacks of books, also on the many shelves that line the walls. Among his rare books is a copy of "Montucla," recounting observations and calculations many thousands of years ago; and here are also reminiscences of the Ptolemies, Thales, and Meton. He has likewise on his shelves standard and learned works on astronomy, as the opinions of Kepler, La Caille, Lambert, Tobias Mayer, Euler, Huygens, Galileo, Maupertius, L'Isle, and others of a more recent date. He is a lover of Brahe and Copernicus, and a most profound admirer of John Müller, to whom must be given the honor of giving to us the completest ephemerides. Then here and there are scattered, only as a student can scatter, charts and calculations of wind currents and air lines, sketches of particular stars, instruments to measure the moon and sun, and many other implements and articles that pertain to the science of astronomy. It is truly a singular apartment to those uninitiated. Mr. Ibach has gained his knowledge by patient industry and hard toil, his distinction, therefore, consisting of gleaming all this astronomical science while working at the forge and anvil.

Church of the United States. He has also been the pastor of St. John's Reformed Church nearly twenty years, and is regarded as one of the ablest preachers and writers in the Reformed Church. He has engaged in many benevolent movements, and endeared himself to the community, of which he is considered one of the most useful and estimable. Rev. Mr. Johnston married, Feb. 14, 1843, Hannah R. Fraily, daughter of Leonard and Mary Fraily, born May 23, 1818, at Haddington, West Philadelphia, Pa. Their children have been Mary Fraily; Susan B., married S. P. REV. T. S. JOHNSTON, D.D.

Thomas Swan Johnston, son of Thomas Johnston (1706-1840) and Mary Swan (1788-1839), was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 4, 1818. His educational advantages were limited to private tutors and a reliance upon his own efforts, and subsequently received the degree of A.M. from Delaware College, and the degree of D.D. from Marysville College, Tennessee. He has been one of the trustees of Palatinate College, Myerstown, Pa., also a school director in Lebanon Borough, Pa., and secretary of the Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of the Reformed

JOHN H. KINPORTS.

John H. Kinports, son of John Kinports and Barbara Huber, was born Jan. 21, 1821, in Lebanon County, Pa. John Kinports, the father, was born in Lancaster County, where he followed farming. He removed to Lebanon County, and subsequently to Dauphin County, where he died in 1855. He married first Barbara Huber, of Lancaster County, and they had Jacob, John H., Barbara, Catharine, Anna, Mary, and Elizabeth. He married secondly Elizabeth Hess, and they had David, Daniel, Abraham, Lydia, and Veronica. The childhood of John H. Kinports was spent upon his father's farm. At the age of fifteen he removed to Annville, and remained three years in the employ of James Bingham. He continued to reside there until his election to the office of clerk of the Orphans' Court and the Court of Quarter Sessions, when he removed to Lebanon. At the expiration of his term of office he returned to Annville and entered into merchandising with C. H. Killinger, then with

Cumberland, Cumberland Co., Pa. His grandfather, John Klein, was descended from German ancestry, and settled in York County, Pa. He had sons, John and Jacob, the former of whom removed to Cumberland County, where he passed the remaining years of his life, dying in 1841. He married Eliza Berghaus, daughter of Henry C. Berghaus, of Dauphin County, and their children were Theodore B., Henry S., and Mary, who died in infancy. The childhood of Theodore B. Klein was passed in Harrisburg, where he received his education in the public schools and Capt. Alden Partridge's Military Institute. He learned the drug business, subsequently removing to Mobile, Ala

H. H. Kreider, and afterwards with D. O. Shenk, his present partner. For a period of ten years he served as an associate judge of the Lebanon County court. Has been president since its organization of the National Bank of Annville. Judge Kinports married Mary Ann Stein, daughter of Phillip Stein, of Annville, and they had George W., Anna married — Miller, Barbara, Rebecca, John H., Philip, Frank, Lizzie, Charles, and Hedwig.

THEODORE B. KLEIN.

Theodore Berghaus Klein, son of John Klein and Eliza Berghaus, was born Aug. 22, 1831, in New

After a brief residence in the South he returned to Harrisburg, and joining a corps of engineers under Gen. Mifflin, engaged in surveys in various parts of the State. For some years he resided in Adams County, engaged in the lumber, coal, and grain trade, but again returned to Harrisburg, and from thence to Lebanon. In 1878 he rebuilt the flouring-mill at New Market Forge, and purchased the forge and farm. In 1880 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and re-elected in 1882. Mr. Klein was twice married,—first, in 1859, to Rebecca Frazer, daughter of Christian and Eliza Frazer, of Harrisburg; their children were Samuel, Ross, Rebecca, and George. He married secondly Margaret Roedel, daughter of Jacob and Justina Roedel, and they had Anna, Jessie, and Jacob.

GEORGE W. KLINE, Jr.

George Washington Kline, Jr., son of George Washington Kline and Catharine Lineaweaver, was born March 13, 1833, at Lebanon, Pa. He was educated at the Lebanon Academy, the Hopkins Grammar School, of New Haven, Conn., and graduated at Yale College in the class of 1853. He then began the study of the law with his uncle, the late Levi Kline, Esq., and was admitted to the bar of Lebanon County April then embarked in mercantile pursuits, which he continued for a period of six years, when he commenced operating extensively in grain and coal, and also became interested in milling enterprises. He was one of the incorporators of the United Brethren Mutual Aid Society, and of which he is now treasurer. Since the organization of the Lebanon Valley College, at Annville, he has been one of its trustees and its treasurer. He has served as county auditor, and in 1876 was elected prothonotary of Lebanon County. Mr. Kreider married, in 1859, Mary Hoverter, daughter of Christian Hoverter, of Annville, and their children surviving are Morris D., William H., and Mary E.

25, 1857, since which period he has been in continued practice of his profession. Mr. Kline married, Nov. 14, 1872, Martha Weidman, daughter of Gen. John Weidman and Emma R. Grant, of Lebanon.

HENRY H. KREIDER.

Henry H. Kreider, son of David Kreider and Sarah Henry, was born Sept. 30, 1835, at the old homestead in South Annville township, Lebanon Co., Pa. (See Kreider record.) His early advantages of education were such as the public schools afforded, supplemented by a full course at the Annville Academy. Five years were subsequently spent in teaching. He

JACOB BLECKER KARCH.

Jacob Blecker Karch, son of Joseph Karch (1808-1880) and Amelia Catharine Heichbold (born 1816), was born Feb. 2, 1851, in Lebanon, Pa. He was educated at the Lebanon High School, Franklin and Marshall College, and Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was in the employ of the Valley National Bank, at Lebanon, from 1869 to July 19, 1880, when he was elected its cashier, which position he still retains. He was married, Sept. 17, 1872, to Mary Ann Plummer, a native of Chesapeake City, Md. Their children are Joseph Plummer, Mary Catharine (d. s. p.), and Martha Townsend.

JOHN W. KILLINGER.

John W. Killinger was born Sept. 18, 1825, in Lebanon County, where his ancestors were among the earliest settlers. He graduated from Marshall College, Mercersburg, in 1843, afterwards studied law, and was admitted to the Lebanon County bar in January, 1846. He was prosecuting attorney for the county until 1849, when he was elected to the Legislature, serving the sessions of 1850 and 1851. In 1854 he was chosen to the State Senate, serving three years. He was elected to the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Congresses from the district comprising Dauphin, Lebanon, and Northumberland Counties, to the Forty-second and Forty-third the principalship of Rev. Stephen Boyer, subsequently entering the grammar school connected with Marshall College, Mercersburg. Remaining there one year and a half, he was admitted to Marshall College, and graduated from that institution Sept. 27, 1843. He then entered the Theological Seminary at Mercersburg, where he pursued his studies under Drs. John W. Nevin and Philip Schaff. Graduating from the seminary, he was ordained to the ministry, and installed as pastor of the Grindstone Hill charge, consisting of four congregations located in the vicinity of Chambersburg. In 1851 he received and accepted a call from the Lebanon charge of the Reformed Church, comprising three congregations, one located in Leb-

Congresses from the district comprising Lebanon and Schuylkill Counties, and to the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses from the district comprising the first-named counties, making twelve years of Congressional life.

Franklin William Kremer, son of Frederick William Kremer (1790-1864) and Anna Margaret Yentzer (1794-1876), was born Nov. 16, 1816, in the village of Washington, Lancaster Co., Pa. His parents removing to York County, the son attended the schools of the neighborhood, and was afterwards sent to the York County Academy, at York, then under anon, one at Annville, and the third, known as the "Hill Church," about three and one-half miles northwest of Lebanon. At the close of the first year his connection with the Annville Church was severed, agreeably to the conditions contained in his acceptance of the call, and in the month of May, 1864, the Classis of Lebanon, with the view of forming a new pastoral charge, separated the "Hill Church" from that of Lebanon, connecting it with that of Annville. His congregation at Lebanon becoming very large, it was apparent to the pastor that an additional church edifice and church organization were necessary for the spiritual interests of his people. Accordingly, through his efforts St. John's Church was erected and dedicated in October, 1860, and a number of the members of the church dismissed by the pastor for the purpose, who organized the new congregation and called as their pastor the Rev. Henry Harbaugh, D.D. The parent church and Sunday-school under Dr. Kremer continued to increase so rapidly that in 1872 a beautiful chapel for the accommodation of the Sunday-school and for other church purposes was required and erected adjoining the old church building. In 1877 it became necessary to make further provision for the spiritual interests of his growing charge, especially for the membership residing south of Lebanon, and this want was met by the erection of a neat brick church at Bismarck, five miles distant. Here a congregation of his membership was organized, served by him and his son, Rev. Leighton G. Kremer, until they were able to secure the services of another pastor, which occurred in 1880, when Rev. A. J. Bachman took charge of the same. Dr. Kremer completed the thirty-second year of his ministry at Lebanon on the 1st of April, 1883. During this period he admitted into the Lebanon congregation alone eighteen hundred and eighty-seven persons, of whom fifteen hundred and nine were received by confirmation, and three hundred and seventy-eight by certificate. Nine persons from his charge are now in the Christian ministry, six of whom he confirmed. His church now numbers about one thousand communicants and seven hundred baptized members not yet confirmed, and is the largest congregation in the county. The Sunday-school numbers six hundred and thirteen,—officers, leaders, and scholars. As a writer, Dr. Kremer has contributed largely to the Reformed Messenger on the subject of the practical and great theological questions that have agitated the Reformed Church for the past thirty years. He was also for several years a contributing editor of the Christian World at Cincinnati, and furnished articles on important topics for the Mercersburg Review, the Reformed Quarterly Review, some of the leading newspapers of Philadelphia and New York, and frequently to the local press of Lebanon. He was one of the representatives of the General Synod of his church to the Second General Presbyterian Council, held at Philadelphia in 1880. He was appointed by the Synod a member of the "Peace Commission" in 1879, and by the General Synod, convened in Tiffin, Ohio, in May, 1881, a member of the commission to prepare a new liturgy for the Reformed Church. He is a life member of the Board of Home Missions of the Reformed Church, of the Pennsylvania Bible Society, of the American Tract Society, and of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Heidelberg College, of Ohio, conferred upon him, 29th of June, 1869, the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. Dr. Kremer married first, Henrietta Cromwell, of Lancaster, Pa., who deceased within the same year. He married secondly, on the 9th of April, 1846, Margaretta Heitshue Keller, daughter of George and Rebecca Keller, of Carlisle, who died at Lebanon, Jan. 5, 1855, at the age of thirty-four years. Their children were Emma Rebecca, married Hon. Joseph E. Noble, of Waterville, Bedford Co., Pa.; Edward Payson, a dentist, residing at Lebanon, a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, and of the Philadelphia Dental College, married Emma C. Behney, of Myerstown; Leighton George, a graduate of Ursinus College and of Union Theological Seminary, New York, an ordained minister of the Reformed Church, at Hagerstown, Md.; and Mary Margaretta, who died in infancy.

Two of Dr. Kremer's brothers are ministers in the Reformed Church,—Rev. A. H. Kremer, D.D., at Carlisle, Pa., and Rev. A. R. Kremer, A.M., at Winchester, Va. A son of the former (Rev. Ellis N. Kremer) is pastor of the Reformed Church, at Bedford, Pa.

Dr. Kremer's ministerial life has been one of continued, unremitting, and successful labor. He has fine pulpit abilities, and prepares his sermons with great care. As a pastor, it is an acknowledged fact that he has few equals and no superior. Notwithstanding his onerous duties as such, he has taken time to make himself fully acquainted with the leading questions of the day, as well as to pursue his studies in theology, church culture, doctrine, and government. Standing at the head of one of the largest congregations in the State, and having labored with a truly apostolic zeal, he is greatly beloved and appreciated by his people, and deservedly possesses the confidence and affection not only of his parishioners, but of the community in which he has so long resided, as well as of his brethren of the ministry and eldership throughout the church.

CYRUS RESLEY LANTZ.

Cyrus R. Lantz, son of Tobias Lantz (1794-1876) and Charlotte (Resley) Lantz (1802-1848), was born in Cornwall township, Lebanon Co., Pa., Aug. 26, 1842. Mr. Lantz was educated in the common schools of his native district and at the Anville High School, and for several terms taught school in his native county; afterwards studied law with Hon. Josiah Funck, of Lebanon, and was admitted to the Lebanon County bar in August, 1869. Mr. Lantz served for two terms as president of the school board of Lebanon borough, two years as deputy county treasurer of Lebanon County, three years as district attorney of the county; was also one of the department officers of the Grand Army of the Republic, and represented the people of Lebanon County for four years in the State Senate. During the war of 1861-65 he served in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, Va. He was married April 29, 1865, to Mary A. Kauffman, daughter of John and Elizabeth Kauffman, who was born in North Lebanon township. Their children are Lily

Jane and Harry Kauffman. Mr. Lantz enjoys a large and lucrative law practice in Lebanon and adjoining counties.

JOHN H. LICK.

John H. Lick, son of James Lick, was born June 30, 1818, in Fredericksburg, Lebanon Co., Pa. His earlier years were passed in attendance upon the common schools of the town. In 1832 he went to reside with an uncle on a farm in Centre County, where he attended the public school near Salona.

ated a flour-mill belonging to his father, near Alviso, remaining until 1863, when ill health compelled him to leave the country. He spent one year in Pennsylvania, passed the following three years in California, and in 1867 made an extended tour in Europe. Upon his return he took up his residence in California. In 1871 he made his home in Lebanon County. Mr. Lick is an old and well-known citizen of Lebanon County, and held in high esteem. He is largely interested in farming enterprises, is a director of the Delaware and Susquehanna Railroad Company.

John H. Lick

In the spring of 1836 he returned to Fredericksburg, and in 1838 entered the store of Moritz Heilner as a clerk, with whom he subsequently removed to Minersville, Schuylkill Co. He remained there until 1841, when he returned to Fredericksburg, and began clerking. In the spring of 1846 he established himself in the mercantile business, which he successfully managed until 1854, when he sold out his establishment and went to California, at the request of his father. He returned home in 1857, but in 1859 went back to the Pacific coast, where he oper-

HON. ANDREW LIGHT.

Andrew Light, son of John Light (1787-1854) and Catharine Funck (1793-1862), was born Feb. 5, 1825, in North Lebanon township, Lebanon Co., Pa. (See Light record.) Until he attained the age of twenty-one he remained upon the paternal farm, which he subsequently cultivated in partnership with his brother Moses. He afterwards removed to North Lebanon, and on the 4th of November, 1846, in connection with Jacob L. Light, established a general store for merchandising, and from that period until the present has been engaged in mercantile pursuits at different points in Lebanon. He has also been in the transportation business, and for two years filled the position of superintendent of the Union Canal. In 1848 he was elected town clerk of North Lebanon township, and in 1850 assessor, filling the latter position by subsequent re-election. He was school director for nine years, during which period the Millin school building on Guilford Street was erected, and also the Webster school-house in the Independent District; was twice elected justice of the peace, and in 1860 clerk of the Orphans' Court of Lebanon County. During the war he was a member of the citizens' committee to supply the first quota of soldiers called from North Lebanon township. On Oct. 4, 1882, he was appointed by Governor Hoyt associate judge of the Court of Common Pleas, to fill the unexpired term of the late Judge William Rank, and at the November election following was chosen to the same position by the popular vote, an office he at present fills. Judge Light married, on July 22, 1847, Catharine Meyer, daughter of John L. Meyer and Catharine Light. Their children were Clara married Samuel S. Horst, Emma, Andrew, and J. Meyer, who graduated from Franklin and Marshall College, studied law, was admitted to the Lebanon County bar, and died suddenly a few years after.

REV. EZEKIEL LIGHT.

Ezekiel Light, son of John Light, was born March 19, 1834, at Lebanon, Pa. He entered the ministry in Ohio in 1855, supplied a number of charges in the latter State as pastor, came home to Lebanon, Pa., in the spring of 1861, was appointed chaplain of the One Hundred and Seventy-third Pennsylvania Regiment Nov. 9, 1862, served ten months, and returned to "take work" in the East Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren Church. Since then he has been pastor of various charges, and repeatedly presiding elder. He edited the Froeliche Botschafter, a German religious weekly, from 1866 to 1869, and the United Brethren Tribune, an English independent paper of the church, from 1873 until the occasion of its existence had passed away.

REV. JOB LIGHT.

Job Light, son of John Light, was born Dec. 11, 1839, at Lebanon, Pa. He commenced his ministry in Ohio about 1859 or 1860, and served various charges in that State, when he returned to Pennsylvania, where he has since labored as pastor and presiding elder. Two years ago he went to Baltimore, Md., where he is now preaching in Fulton Street United Brethren Church.

John B. W. Pherson

REV. JOEL LIGHT.

Joel Light, son of Rev. Casper Light, was born in 1837, near Lebanon, Pa. He early entered the ministry, and in his style of preaching very much resembles his father. He belongs to the East German Conference, supplying at present a charge between Lebanon and Jonestown.

REV. RUDOLPH LIGHT.

Rudolph Light, son of John Light, was born Nov. 7, 1826, at Lebanon, Pa. He commenced to preach in 1854, and labored both as a missionary in Canada and as pastor of various churches in the East Pennsylvania Conference. At present he sustains a local relation. He is uncompromising and fearless as a minister and as a man. He advocates the temperance cause. Being asked by a hotel-keeper for building-stones which he had for sale, he replied that he had no stones for a building in which there was any liquor to be sold, and refused. He is radical and consistent in his advocacy of reforms.

HON. JOHN B. MCPHERSON.

John Bayard McPherson, son of Dr. William Carrick McPherson and Elizabeth Wallace, was born Nov. 5, 1846, at Harrisburg, Pa. His paternal ancestors were Robert and Janet McPherson, who settled in the Marsh Creek settlement, now Adams Co., Pa., in the autumn of 1735. Robert McPherson died there Dec. 25, 1749, and his wife Janet, Sept. 23, 1767. Their son, Robert,¹ was the father of John

¹ Robert McPherson, son of Robert and Janet McPherson, born in 1730, came to be a man of prominence in the early history of the State, and, in connection with the brief sketch of his great-grandson, Judge McPherson, the following reference to him will be appropriate. Robert McPherson was educated at Rev. Dr. Alison's school at New London. His father died Dec. 25, 1749, and his mother on the 23d of September, 1767. In 1751 he married Agnes, the daughter of Robert Miller, of the Cumberland Valley. In 1755 he was appointed treasurer of York County, and commissioner in 1756. The latter office he resigned on accepting a commission as captain in the Third Battalion of the Provincial forces, May 10, 1758, serving under Gen. Forbes on his expedition against Fort Duquesne. From 1762 to 1765 he was sheriff of the county, and from 1764 to the beginning of the Revolution was a justice of the peace under the Proprietary, and was re-commissioned under the first Constitution. From 1765 to 1767 he was a member of the Provincial Assembly, and in 1768 was appointed county treasurer to fill a vacancy. At the outset of the war of independence he was commissioned a colonel of one of the York County battalions of associators; was a member of the Provincial Conference which met at Carpenters' Hall, June 18, 1776, and represented the county in the convention of July 15th following. During that and the following year he was in active duty in the Jerseys and in the subsequent campaign around Philadelphia. After his return from the field he was employed as the purchasing commissary for the western end of York County. From 1781 to 1785 he served as a member of the Assembly. Col. McPherson was one of the charter members of the corporation of Dickinson College, and continued to act as a trustee until his death. He was an elder in the Upper Marsh Creek Presbyterian Church, which was organized in 1740, or within two years of the beginning of the settlement. His death, from paralysis, occurred on the 19th of February, 1789, his wife surviving him until Sept. 12, 1802. He had a large family. Two of his sons, William and Robert, were officers in the service of the Revolution. Some of his descendants remain in Adams County, but the great majority are scattered over the various States of the Union. Edward McPherson, member of the Bayard McPherson, who for many years was cashier of the Gettysburg Bank. The latter's son, Dr. William, married Elizabeth Wallace, daughter of Joseph Wallace, who was a prominent and trusted citizen of Harrisburg. John B. McPherson received his early education in the private school of Professor Jacob F. Seiler, at the Harrisburg Academy, and in the public schools of Sidney, Ohio, where he resided from 1858 to 1862. He entered Princeton College in August, 1862, from which institution he graduated in 1866. He studied law with John Hanna Briggs in Harrisburg, and with Scammon, McCagg & Fuller in Chicago, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in January, 1870. He was elected district attorney in 1874, and served during the years 1875, '76, '77. A portion of the time he was in law partnership with Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, and afterwards with Lyman D. Gilbert. In February, 1882, he was appointed by Governor Hoyt to fill a vacancy in the office of additional law judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, caused by the resignation of Judge Henderson, and the consequent promotion of Judge Simonton to the president judgeship, and in November, 1882, he was elected without opposition to the same place. Judge McPherson married, Dec. 30, 1879, Annie Cochran Patterson, daughter of Judge David W. Patterson and Mary Slaymaker, of Lancaster, Pa.

COL. JOHN M. MARK.

John Miller Mark, son of George Mark and Elizabeth Miller, was born on the 15th of March, 1822, in East Hanover township, Lebanon Co., Pa. His boyhood was passed in a rural neighborhood, and his school advantages were meagre. He was register of the county from 1854 to 1857. When the Ninety-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers was raised, in 1861, he entered the service as captain, commissioned Oct. 3, 1861, was promoted to major in June following, and colonel in November. He was with Peck in the battle of Williamsburg, of whom Gen. Couch said, "He had the good fortune to be in advance, and arriving on the battle-ground at a critical time, won a reputation to be greatly envied." In the desperate fighting at Fair Oaks, Col. Mark was wounded in the right arm, which resulted in the stiffening of three fingers. At Antietam he was again with his regiment, and at Fredericksburg was in Gen. Wheaton's brigade of Gen. Franklin's Grand Division. On the 12th of March, 1863, Col. Mark was mustered out of service.

Martin Meily, son of Martin Meily (1776-1844) and ——— Oberholzer (1776-1854), daughter of Martin Oberholzer (1733-1815), was born in the year

Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Congresses, clerk of the national House of Representatives twelve years, and author of the "Political History of the Rebellion," "History of Reconstruction," and the "Political Hand-Books" for 1872, '74, '76, and '78, and late editor of The Press, Philadelphia, is a grandson.

1801, in Bethel township, Dauphin (now Lebanon) Co., Pa. He is entirely self-educated, never having the advantages of the schools. He was brought up on his father's farm, and learned the trade of a potter. For a period of ten years he served as justice of the peace, and for three years was a commissioned notary public. Having during this period given his attention to surveying and the study of land titles, he was elected county surveyor, and is now in his third term in that office. Squire Meily married, in 1823, Magdalena Groh, daughter of John Groh, born in 1798 in Bethel township, and they had Benjamin, d. s. p., John, and Jacob.

GEORGE F. MEILY.

George F. Meily was born Sept. 8, 1833, in Jones-town, Lebanon Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of his native town, and learned merchandising, and for a long period has been engaged in the coal and lumber trade. In 1876 he was elected to the State Senate from Lebanon, serving in that position one term of four years. In 1877 he was chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings, in 1878 chairman of the same committee, and in 1879 chairman of the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform.

REV. SIMON NOLL.

Simon Noll, son of John Noll (1781-1852) and Anna Mary Harner (1785-1861), was born Nov. 2, 1817, in Lyken's Valley, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the common schools of the county. In 1842 he became a member of the Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren Church, and has without any interruption continued in the ministry for over forty years. His charges generally have been in the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, Schuylkill, Berks, Perry, Northampton, and Lehigh. His present station is Union Deposit Circuit of the East German Conference. He uses the German language in his public ministrations, and as a minister and man has always been known for his integrity and fidelity to his work. During his ministry he has received into church membership sixteen hundred persons. Mr. Noll married, in 1852, Isabella H. Weiser, and their children were Lawrence G. married Clara Kollar, Sarah married Samuel Gasser, Minnie V., and John H.

REV. JAMES R. REILY.

James Ross Reily, son of John Reily and Elizabeth Myers, was born Oct. 31, 1788, in Myerstown, Lebanon Co., Pa. His mother dying when he was about twelve years of age, he was given to the care of his maternal aunt, the wife of the Rev. Dr. Hendel, then pastor at Tulpehocken. Here he remained until the age of fifteen, when he went to Womelsdorf to learn merchandising. Having meanwhile felt the impulses of a higher mission, in 1809 he commenced his theological studies with the Rev. Dr. Becker, of Baltimore. In 1812, at the Synod of the Reformed Church held at Philadelphia, he was licensed as a catechist, and having already received call from the churches in Lyken's Valley he was sent thither. At the meeting of Synod in 1813, owing to the earnest entreaty of the destitute congregations in North Carolina, Rev. Dr. Becker, whose pupil Mr. Reily had been, proposed the latter for that mission, and he was accordingly set apart for that work. He returned to his charge on the Susquehanna in December of that year. From 1816 to 1818 he represented the county of Dauphin in the State Legislature, though he did not resign his charge, his congregations having been meanwhile supplied from other sources. He was ordained in 1817.

About the close of 1818, he accepted a call from Hagerstown, Md., and some affiliated congregations. His health, however, soon began to fail, and he resigned his charge, preaching his farewell discourse April 24, 1825. At this time the establishment of a theological seminary by his church required an agent to be sent to Europe to secure aid from the churches in the Fatherland. Mr. Reily accepted the agency, not because he was deeply interested in the success of the institution, but that he hoped his health might be benefited by the voyage. He remained abroad one year and a half, having collected nearly seven thousand dollars in money and several thousand volumes of books which he received as gifts. His health showing a temporary improvement induced him to accept a call from the congregation at York, of which he was pastor from April 1, 1827, until July 20, 1831, when he resigned, owing to ill health. In 1834 he was register for the county of York, held the office of justice of the peace during the latter part of his life, and kept a book-store at York. He died there on the 18th of March, 1844, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. "In the pulpit he was grave and earnest. As a preacher he was ready, fluent, and often truly eloquent." The Rev. Mr. Reily was twice married: first, Aug. 31, 1819, to Mary Orndorf, who died Feb. 29, 1820; second, June 10, 1834, to Mrs. Louisa McClellan, and they had two sons, one of whom is a minister in the Reformed Church.

REV. WILLIAM McCLELLAN REILY.

William McClellan Reily was born in York County, Pa., in 1837. His father, Rev. James R. Reily, a pastor of the Reformed Church, was a native of Myerstown, Lebanon Co. Professor Reily studied under Professor Rubey, at York, later attended school at Gettysburg, and in 1856 graduated at the Pennsylvania College. He spent two years at Princeton Theological Seminary, and one year at the Mercersburg Seminary. After a two years' sojourn in Europe in the further prosecution of his studies, he returned to America and served as theological tutor at Mercersburg. He soon assumed a pastoral charge at Lewisburg, Pa., where he remained four years, after which he passed four years at Jonestown, Lebanon

Co., as pastor of the Reformed Church in that place. In 1873 he joined the faculty of the Palatinate College at Myerstown as Professor of Languages, and still occupies that chair. In 1882 his work entitled, "The Artist and His Mission," was issued by Potter & Co., of Philadelphia. This volume, designated "A Study in Æsthetics," has engaged much favorable attention and commendation at the hands of able critics. Professor Reily has been also at various times a free contributor to periodicals of the time, notably the Mercersburg Review, Potter's Monthly, and The Guardian.

interest in the business, the new firm of Reinoehl & Meily being formed. In 1860 his father withdrew from the firm, and that of Reinoehl & Meily continuing. The business was subsequently enlarged, now comprising in addition a planing-mill and sash-factory, and one-half of a large saw-mill at Middletown. Notwithstanding his own individual and partnership interests, Mr. Reinoehl has identified himself with other industrial enterprises, and is one of the directors of the Lebanon Manufacturing Company. He was formerly a director of the Union Canal Company; a director of the Mount Lebanon Cemetery

ADOLPHUS REINOEHL.

Adolphus Reinoehl, son of Samuel Reinoehl and Mary Uhler, was born Sept. 13, 1830. He received his education in the private schools of Lebanon and at the academy in that place, and at the age of sixteen became an apprentice to the trade of a blacksmith. At the expiration of his apprenticeship, he entered into a contract to do all the iron-work for nine locks and two aqueducts for the Union Canal Company at the Lebanon Water-Works, which he performed. In April, 1852, he went to California, and remained there two years mining in Sierra County. Returning home he assisted his father in the lumber trade until 1855, when he purchased an Association since its organization; and a director of the Live Stock Insurance Company of Lebanon County.

He was chief burgess of North Lebanon borough in 1859 and 1868, and in 1869 was elected the first chief burgess of the consolidated borough. He was chosen water-director in 1871, but resigned that position upon receiving the unanimous appointment to that of chief burgess by the Common Council in 1871-72. In the year 1872 he was elected prothonotary of the county, filling that office one term.

Mr. Reinoehl married, in 1850, Elizabeth Parthemore, daughter of George and Louisa Parthemore, and their children are Edwin George, superintendent of the planing-mill of Reinoehl & Meily; Mary Ann, married Dr. A. W. Shultz, of Jonestown; Samuel P., Adolphus A., Harry Anson, book-keeper for Reinoehl & Meily, and Louisa M.

GEORGE RIGLER.

George Rigler, son of John Rigler and Margaret Hornketh, was born March 29, 1817, in the city of Philadelphia. His grandfather, George Rigler, emigrated from Germany, and settled in Annville; margaged in business with his relative, which he successfully conducted. Mr. Rigler is a director of the national bank at Annville, one of the original corporators of the Lebanon Manufacturing Company, and interested in other local enterprises. He married, March 8, 1838, Mary Nye, daughter of Frederick Nye, of Annville, and their children were Mary, d. s. p.; George, d. s. p.; Margaret, Louisa married D. O. Shenk, Mary Elizabeth, John, d. s. p.; Albert Charles, Sarah M. married Frank Platt, Emma C. married Thomas Urich, and Ella Jane.

John, the eldest son, removed to Philadelphia, where he married Margaret Hornketh, daughter of Jeremiah Hornketh, and their children were John, George, William, Henry, Charles, Peter, Louisa married John Lacock, Margaret married Amos Hiller, Catharine married Richard Bracken, and Sarah.

At the age of eleven George took up his residence with his uncle, George Rigler, at Annville, attended the public schools of the town, and subsequently en-

JOHN B. SEIDEL.

John Barr Seidel, son of Jonathan Seidel (1787-1858) and Susan Barr (died 1826), was born at Pine Grove, Schuylkill Co., Pa., April 13, 1813. His educational advantages were such as the schools of that time afforded until 1829, when he attended the academies in Chester and Montgomery Counties until 1833. For a period of forty-one years he was engaged in the iron business. He was elected a representative from the county of Lebanon to the State Legislature, serving the session of 1881-82.

John L. Saylor

JOHN L. SAYLOR.

John L. Saylor, son of John Saylor and Sarah Lerch, was born Feb. 7, 1834, in Swatara township, Lebanon Co., Pa. Peter Saylor, his grandfather, resided in Swatara township; he married Elizabeth Miller, and their children were John, David, Jacob, Samuel, and four daughters. His son, John Saylor, born March 22, 1804, married Sarah Lerch, born in 1807, and their children among others were John L., Daniel, Elizabeth m. — Battorff, Adam, David, Elias, and William. John L. Frederick Shultz, born in 1800, at Newmans-town, where he resides; served one term as county quently engaged in merchandising. In 1879 he was elected on the Republican ticket prothonotary of Lebanon County. Mr. Shultz married in 1845, Esther Gerhard, of Berks County, and their children were John B., Emma R., Paul D. P., Louisa C., Katie E., Hattie E. married Charles Haymaker, Clara R., Sallie D., and Joseph S.

BENJAMIN W. STAUFFER, M.D.

Benjamin W. Stauffer, son of John Stauffer and Huldah Witwer, was born Nov. 9, 1825, in Lancaster County, Pa., where his boyhood was spent. After acquiring the English branches he determined upon the study of medicine, and entered the office of Dr. A. W. Shelly, of Litiz. He graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and located at Campbellstown, Lebanon Co., where he continues in the active practice of his profession.

Dr. Stauffer married, in May, 1848, Hetty G. Hostetter, of Lebanon County, and their children were Addison W., Jefferson D., John C. D., Harvey F., Caroline (Mrs. Johnson), Sarah, Emma, Hettie, and Ada H. Of these John C. D. Stauffer studied medicine, and is practicing his profession at Manheim, Lancaster Co.; Addison W. Stauffer is a graduate of the State Normal School at Millersville, and now engaged in teaching. The remaining sons are interested in agricultural or business pursuits.

PETER B. WITMER, A.M.

Peter B. Witmer, son of Michael Witmer and Anna Burkholder, was born Oct. 25, 1823, in South Lebanon township, Lebanon Co., Pa. (see Witmer record). His early years were passed on the farm. At the age of seventeen he entered a private school at Columbia, Pa., and afterwards attended Fairview Academy in wards located at Myerstown, where he remained seven years. In the year 1857 he became a resident of Palmyra, and there founded a select boarding-school, which has been continued under his supervision to the present date. The institution has been deservedly popular, and established a reputation for a high grade of scholarship. Mr. Witmer married, in May, 1850,

Peter B Witmer

Adams County. He became a pupil of Mount St. Mary's College, Emmittsburg, Md., at the age of nineteen, and later entered Princeton College, N. J. He received his degree of A.M. from Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa. W. M. Weigley

WILLIAM M. WEIGLEY.

Long prior to 1734 John Michael Weigley had settled in Lower Salford township, at which time he was a land owner of a considerable tract. His son George died Oct. 20, 1760, leaving a widow and five children, viz., Elizabeth, wife of Frederick Gable, Catharine, George, Margaret, and John. Whilst Adam Weigley, the immediate progenitor of the family in Lebanon County, was born in 1744 in Lancaster County, where his father, a brother of John Michael and a contemporary of William Penn, had settled. The descendants of these brothers are widely scattered with their numerous progeny through Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

William M. Weigley, son of Jacob Weigley and Catharine Miller, was born Jan. 1, 1818, at Millbach, Lebanon Co., Pa. His grandfather, Adam Weigley, of German parentage, was born near Reamstown, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1744. For a long period he resided in Montgomery County, where he was largely interested in marble quarries, later removing to Berks County, where he died in 1798. He married Hannah Eva Walter, and their children were Joseph, Samuel, David, Daniel, Jacob, Elizabeth, Sarah, Catharine, and Susannah. Jacob Weigley, the youngest son, born Jan. 22, 1789, resided at Millbach, where he followed farming, dying 21st of December, 1880. He married, Sept. 28, 1810, Catharine Miller, daughter of John Miller, born Jan. 7, 1792, died March 21, 1869, and their children were Mary, Isaac, Charles, William M., Allen, Caroline, Lucy A., Henrietta, Oliver, and John A. William M. Weigley, the subject of this sketch, was educated at the Tulpenhock Academy, of Myles Green, near Stouchsburg, Pa., after which he decided upon a mercantile life, and entered the store of Lyon Lemberger, of Myerstown, Pa. At the age of nineteen he accepted a position in the store of Messrs. S. S. & Abraham Rex, of Shaefferstown, of which he became owner by purchase in 1839. He prosecuted his mercantile venture with such energy that, finding a wide field for similar enterprises, he established stores at Myerstown and at Millbach. In 1856 he retired from business with a competency, but in the panic of 1857 his losses, sustained through indorsements, were so great that he once more resumed mercantile pursuits. By indefatigable labor and kindly aid he retrieved his fortunes and again placed himself in the enjoyment of comfortable independence. He was mainly instrumental in the establishment of the Shaefferstown High School, and largely concerned in the erection of the Reformed Church in that borough. He married, in 1841, Anna Rex, daughter of Abraham Rex, of Shaefferstown, and a granddaughter of John Henry Shaeffer, whose father, Alexander Shaeffer, founded the town bearing his name. Their children are Rex, married Mary E. Borthwick, of Philadelphia; William Wallace, married Mary S. Forney, daughter of the late John W. Forney, of Philadelphia, and is a practicing lawyer of that city; and Anna Isadore, married Theodore D. Griswold, of St. Joseph, Mo.

CHARLES M. ZERBE.

Charles M. Zerbe, son of Dr. Jonathan Zerbe and Martha A. Myer, was born Sept. 2, 1841, at Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the town until 1835, then at the Shaefferstown Academy until 1859, when he entered the sophomore class of Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pa., from which institution he graduated in July, 1862. He then taught one term in the public schools, and for a term of nine months was tutor of the languages and higher mathematics in a private high school at Shaefferstown. He read law in the office of Samuel Perkins, of Philadelphia, during the years 1864 to 1866, and admitted to practice in all the Courts of Common Pleas of Philadelphia, May 19, 1866. In August of the same year he was admitted to the Lebanon County bar, and took up his residence at Shaefferstown. Mr. Zerbe was elected a justice of the peace for Heidelberg township in 1875, and re-elected in 1880, but resigned in 1881. He remains in the practice of his profession.

GENEALOGICAL REGISTER.

THE following data relating to families of Lebanon County, although mostly disconnected, will no doubt be of value and interest, as they may not only induce but enable many to make further research by furnishing a clue to the family of their ancestors. The contractions used are b. born, d. died, m. married. The orthography of surnames is that given in the records of the court, whether will, deed, or administration account, and very often not written as the testator would have done. We have referred to this subject in a former part of this work.

In the preparation of the following "Genealogical Register" we have come across a number of Christian names which may perchance be unintelligible to the majority of readers. For instance:

Christly is for Christian.

THE WEIGLEY FAMILY.

It is a traditional fact in the early history of the Weigley family in this country that their direct ancestor came over with William Penn and settled in Philadelphia County. Whether he was an actual convert to Quakerism or not does not appear, although that the family here owes its origin to that portion of its German ancestry which came under the influence of Penn when he visited Holland and Germany in 1671 for the advancement of Quakerism, is manifest. Long prior to 1734 John Michael Weigley had settled in Lower Salford township, at which time he was a land-owner of a considerable tract. His son George died Oct. 20, 1760, leaving a widow and five children, viz., Elizabeth, wife of Frederick Gable, Catharine, George, Margaret, and John. While Adam Weigley, the immediate progenitor of the family in Lebanon County, was born in 1744 in Lancaster County, where his father, a brother of John Michael and a contemporary of William Penn, had settled. The descendants of these brothers are widely scattered through their numerous progeny through Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

ADAM WEIGLEY; b. at Reamstown, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1744; removed to White Marsh, Montgomery Co., Pa.; m., in 1770, to Hannah Eva Walter, who was born in Cocalico township, Lancaster Co., Pa., and who survived her husband several years, dying in 1840, near Newmanstown, Berks Co., Pa. Adam was a farmer by occupation, and finally settled near Womelsdorf, Pa., where he died in 1798, leaving considerable real estate, as appears from the proceedings in partition in the Orphans' Court of the County of Berks, commenced in December, 1800, and leaving the following children, to wit:

- i. Joseph; b. in 1770; m. in 1790; admitted to the bar of Philadelphia County in 1798; removed to Westmoreland County, Pa., and died near Greensburg in 1819, leaving issue, three sons, viz.: Alexander, a physician, now dead, and Horatio and Wellington, both lawyers, now living in Chicago, Ill.; also six daughters, viz, Eliza, Julia, Ann, Hannah, Harriet, and Mary.

- ii. Samuel; b. in 1772; m. to Maria Reed, and had issue: Hannah, Rebecca (m. to Jacob Hediger), Lucy (m. to Henry Lantz), Lydia (m. to George Bechtoltz), William (m. to Royal Phillabaum), and Mary (m. to Emanuel Noll).
- iii. David.
- iv. Jacob; b. Jan. 22, 1789; m. Catharine Miller. (See record below.)
- v. Daniel.
- vi. Elizabeth; m. to Joseph Debbie, Berks County, Pa., had issue (1) Elizabeth, (2) Julia (m. to Henry Noll).
- vii. Sarah; m. to John Brow, Newmantown, Berks Co., Pa.
- viii. Catharine; m. Philip Kalbaugh, Berks Co., Pa.
- ix. Susannah; m. to Jacob Noll, West Va.

Of the above Jacob alone settled permanently in Lebanon County, where nearly all of his descendants now reside.
